the place indicated by the distressed seighbor. Pushing back its swinging door, he went directly to the proprie-tor and told him what had occurred. siding, "I have a carriage here, and If you will help me, we can soon con-vey Mr. ---- to his home;" but the silon keeper not only declined to help, but would not admit that the gentlebou would not admit that the gentle-ban would not admit that the gentle-ban was there, and gave Gen. Dow to understand that "the sconer he went about his business the better it would about his business the better it would he for him." Seeing another door at the lower end of the saloon, Gen. Dow turned, and passing through it, found uned, and passing through it, found his friend lying drunk on a lounge out of sight. He then returned to the pro-phetor and renewed his request with urgency, but was repulsed with even Runger opposition than before. "Do you mean," said Gen, Dow, "that you will go on selling to this man when you know what the result will be to his wife and children?" "Certainly I have an any selling to pay shall, as long as he has money to pay for his drink," was the answer. Gen. be nis drink," was the driswer. Gen, Dow turned to leave the place, but before doing so, he fired his Parthian arrow at the saloonkeeper: "You in-tend to go on selling, do you? Very tend to go on selling, do you? Very well, my friend, the people of the state of Maine will see how long you will go on selling." From that hour, he so on selling." From that hour, he "stayed not for brake and he stopped hot for stone."

Bot for stone." It was in 1851, when he secured the Maine law, now known the world over. And what of the results in that state? In 1851 the whole savings of the Mate amounted to less than 390,000 and siter 50 years of prohibition the aggre-sate denosite exceeded $113,000,000. ate to years of perceeded $113,000,000. There is no other thing it can be at-tributed to. This is only one instance of growth. It takes and took time to store so rigid a law, but, when the right man is in office, the work moves on to vision.

No wonder the temperance people of the Justion honor the birthday, March 17, of this man. Gen. Neal Dow lived a life that re-sultres no apology; if his record could be known (not that "dress parade" record which the great public sees, but that of every day life not only in the "public walks" but "secret ways"), he would be found to be and to have been always, a man thoroughly loyal to womanhood and home; clean from the use of alcoholics, tobacco and other felterious deterious drugs, and fighting like a featuriess soldier in the forefront of that great battle of liberty which in-volves the emancipation of women, the dewnfall of the liquor triffic, and the realization of the poet's splendid ut-terance;

"Oh, Freedom, deepen thou a grave, all drop in crown and chain, Till only man remain."
