NARROW ESCAPE FROM BOLT OF LIGHTNING

(Special Correspondence.)
MOAB, Grand Co., Aug. 25.—While en route from Monticello to this place, one of Nephi Baily's sons had a narrow escape from instant death. In company with Mrs. George Perkins and daughter, he had made a temporary camp in Dry valley. Just prior to leaving camp, Mrs. Perkins' daughter decided to walk on ahead, leaving Mr. Baily to hitch his team and follow. This move proved to be a very fortunate one, as a few moments later a bolt of lightning descended from a heavy cloud and just passing, striking and instantly killing both horses and knocking Mr. Baily from the wagon, where he had climbed for the purpose of re-arranging the wagon cover. He was knocked senseless to the ground, where he lay until the mail carrier came along shortly after and found him. Mr. Baily was not seriously injured, having only received a nervous shock.

Later a team was sent from Monticello, bringing the outfit on to Moab.

The esteemed host had and hearty in his eightieth year, presided over the assemblage, and the close of the program a splendid lunch was passed to the assembled guests by his charming daughters after which ice cream was served ending up with delicious fruit picked from his and neighboring orchards. STRANGE FREAKS OF THUNDER BOLTS

Melts Brass Bedstead But Sleepers Unharmed—Another Veins Wrath on Banjo.

(Special Correspondence.)
FRANCIS, Summit Co., Aug. 25.—Last Sunday night Aug. 21, the most severe electrical storm ever experienced by the settlers of this vicinity, burst upon them with startling force.

The Turnbow residents in Kamas was struck and quite badly damaged, the strange feature however, being that though the brass bedsteads, occupied by mother and children were struck by the electrical fluid, the sleepers remained unharmed, though the brasses were melted and ruined. The O'Driscoll residence in Francis was also a scene of considerable havoc; the lightning chased along the ceilings and walls, scattering building material hither and yon, while the final gasp centered its erstwhile pent up spleen by stripping an inoffensive banjo of its strings and silencing it forever. Here again the inmates of the home however, escaped though the fumes and noise aroused them from their slumbers.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES DRAW SMALL WAGE

Large numbers of girls are appointed as unskilled and skilled laborers, on a low grade competitive examination, at a very small salary, or with compensations as piece workers. The money counters in the treasury department are almost exclusively women, frequently entering the service by the route of appointment as skilled laborers in the bureau of engraving and printing. When the work is heavy and the health destroying nature of the work and their responsibility is considered, their average pay is ridiculously small. Yet an effort has been made to reduce their wages below living wages because the field is solely occupied by women.
Success in any attempt to reduce women's wages in the service seems unlikely, if one appeals to history for precedent and prophecy. Forty years ago the minimum wage for men engaged in clerical work in the civil service was $1,200 per annum for women, $800. The official hours were from 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. Afterward a grade for women was established at $720 per annum, and an hour was added to the clerical day. Following in rather close succession, grades were established at $1,000, at $840, at $850, at $850, at $850, a year or two ago a grade of $900 was proposed, but failed of enactment. Meanwhile another half hour was added to the day, and the hours are now from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m.
It is thus made apparent that, while the present clerical grading is said to have been established in the early '50s, the standard of wages has been reduced by the institution of seven lower grades through which women, and sometimes men, must climb to reach a living salary, and by two additions to the length of the official day, and this has occurred during a period when the cost of living has been constantly advancing.

In 1904 the force of federal employees numbered 150,385, of whom 13,322, or between 8 and 9 per cent, were females. Of this small proportion 5,519 received less than $900 per annum, which was the lowest salary at which women were appointed 40 years ago. This well illustrates the attitude of the government toward women.

In pausing to glance at the anomalous retrogression of wages, I do not wish to divert attention from the subject of this article—the banishment of women from the service. The question was asked of a certain bureau officer: "You have said many times that your women clerks are more faithful, more accurate, more conscientious than the men and equally competent, and hence entitled to promotion. Why, then, do you always ask the commission for men?"

This was his answer: "Women are entitled to the appointments under the law, and by reason of their equal efficiency. They are also justly entitled to the suffrage. But they have not the suffrage, and so they cannot have the appointments. The voters must have the places. If you women want positions in the civil service you must first secure citizenship through the ballot."

DESSERT MAKES FINE ZOO.

With a Few Peanuts, Raisins, Bananas And Toothpicks, Boy Can Make Own Toys.
To make dessert menageries represents an excellent amusement for an afternoon when nursery lessons are over. Chestnuts, peanuts and filberts, a banana, a few raisins and dried figs, with a couple of corks, a box of spent matches, string and wire represent the stock in trade of the dessert sculptor. The matches, sharpened at the ends, are used for limbs, necks, animals' tails or for chair and table legs.
To make a quaint little Maori chief, tain three large chestnuts strung on a piece of string should form the body, a match forming the neck, to which a filbert is attached. Then green husk is pulled back and fringed with a pair of scissors, represents his feathered dress, while eyes, nose and mouth are notched with a sharp knife and scored with ink. Matches and cobs form legs, arms, feet and hands.
A banana, with matches as oars, can be turned into an excellent Spanish galley, ingenuity soon adding sails with the aid of paper and sticks.
