GOLD AND COAL OIL.

I have not been able to discover much as to the mineral wealth of Sumatra, Gold and sliver are known to exist, and the country has a Mount Ohpir, but whether its name has anything to do with the gold of Ophir I do not know. There are gold fields about Padars which have have been noted for centuries and placer mines in other parts of the island which are still in opera-tion. There is some tin along the coast of the strait and there are copper mines near the Merapi volcano. Iron has been smelted for centuries by certain of the tribes, and there are coal oil fields which are the source of much speculation in the stock markets of the various ports of the far east. There is one oil region known as the Langket which has made fortunes on paper for the foreigners in Shanghal, but so far as I can learn no great quantity of pe-troleum has yet come from them.

THE TIN MINES OF BANKA.

Among the richest mineral regions of this part of the world are those on some of the smaller islands about Su matra. I passed the Island of Banka in coming to Singapore. This island is separated from Supatra by the Eanka straits. Almost adjoining it is the Island of Billiton. Banka is about half again as large as Porto Rico and Billi-ton about one and one-half times the size of Rhode Island. Both these islands have enormous deposits of the their output amousting to several million dollars annually. The mines are a monopoly of the Dutch government, which works them with Chinese cheap labor. Much of the tin is alluvial; it is washed out and smelted by the Chinese. The chief town of Banka is Muntok, which is the seat of the Dutch government. It is a little city of 4,000, and is a port of call for Dutch steamers beween Batavia and Singapore.
