OLD MRS. NORTON'S LEGACY.

AN INTERESTING STORY ABOUT A WILL THAT WASN'T FINISHED.

I had a rather an interesting experience with old Mrs. Norton once. She married Mr. Norton on the death of his first wife, and the moment she came into the house war began between the new wife and the wealthy man's son, which has lasted until now. Mr. Norton soon died, and when years afterwards the widow was very ill I was called to write her will. I hurried to the death-bed with paper and pen. I found a stand and a candle, placed them at the head of the bed, and after saying a few words to her told her I was ready to prepare the will if she would now go on and tell me what she wanted to do. I wrote the introduction phrase rapidly, and leaning over toward her said: "Now, go on, Mrs. Norton." Her voice was quite faint, and she seemed to speak with an effort. She said: "First of all, I want to give the farm to my sons, Harry and James; just put that down." "But," said I, "you can't do that, Mrs. Norton; the farm isn't yours to give away."

"The farm isn't mine," she said, in a voice decidedly stronger than before.

"No, the farm isn't yours. You have only a life interest in it."

"This farm that I've run for goin' on for forty-three years next spring isn't mine to do as I please with! Why not, judge? I'd like to know what you mean?"

"Why, Mr. Norton, your husband, gave you a life estate in all his property, and on your death the farm goes to his son John, and your children get the village houses."

"And when I die John Norton is to have this house and farm, whether I will or no?"

"Just so. It will be his."

"Then I ain't going to die," said the old woman in a clear and decidedly ringing voice. And, so saying, she threw her feet over the front of the bed, sat up, gathered a blanket and coverlid about her, straightened up her gaunt form, walked across the room and sat down in a great chair before the fire. The doctor and I came home. That was fifteen years ago. The old lady is alive to day. And she accomplished her intent. She beat John after all. He died four years ago in Boston, and I don't know what will he left.—Journal of Commerce.

JOHN BROWN'S SON.

"The other day," says a writer in the Chicago Herald, "I met Jason Brown, the son of old John Brown, of Osawatomie and Harper's Ferry. He is a gray-haired old man himself now, but still a hard worker, a common laborer. He was rather bitter against Rev. N. Utter, of Chicago, and others who have been writing against his father in the "North American Review" and other periodicals. Utter, it will be remembered, charges old John with the willful murder of five unoffending men in Kansas, who were taken from their homes and cut down on the prairie. Jason admits that these men were killed, and that his father approved of it, though he did not do any of the killing himself But he adds the important information that the men thus killed had been selected at a secret meeting of pro-slavery leaders to assassinate the Brown family. Jason Brown, who lives in Summit County, Ohio, and John Brown, Jr., whose home is at Put-in-Bay, Lake Erie, are the only ones of the famous family of Brown boys now living."

This is a proper time of the year in which to gather and sow many kinds of Forest tree seeds. Beech nuts, acorns, walnuts, hickory nuts, etc., are now prime for planting.

Aeronauts say that in passing over a lake or sea in a baloon the bottom can be distinctly seen, the water being no hindrance whatever. This knowledge will hereafter be put to good use in getting charts of the ocean.

Paper is now made in Sweden from the bleached and blanched remains of mosses that lived centuries ago and now found in enormous quantities. The paper is turned out in all degrees of excellence from tissue to sheets three-fourths of an inch thick.

The climate of Oregon and Washington Territory is said to be especially adapted to hop growing. The success of the hop yards on the Pacific Coast has induced greatly increased planting, which will have its effect on prices another year.

The Duke of Abercorn has 13 titles, each of which represents a separate peerage; the Marquis of Bute has 15, the Dukes of Argyll and Buccleuch have each 16, the Duke of Hamilton has 17, the late Marquis of Hastings had 19 but the Duke of Athol, with 23, stands at the top of the tree.

The number of years that a student has to spend at a medical institution before obtaining a degree is: In Sweden, 10; Norway, 8; Denmark, 7; Belgium, Holland, Italy and Switzerland, 6; Russia, Portugal, Austria and Hungary, 5; France, England and Canada, 4; United States, 3 or 2; Spain, 2.

John J. Thomas says that seeds should not be covered a depth of more than five times their diameter. Fine seeds should be covered with soil made proportionably fine. The general practice is to cover too deeply. Seeding with the drill increases this tendency but has the advantage of securing greater uniformity of depth.

Various operas in Manchester were heard by the means of telephones at a distance of from twelve to fifteen miles from the opera house. In one case the audience consisted of a fashionable dinner party who while discussing soups were also listening to the music of the Bohemian Girl, the audience enjoying the music almost as much as if they were in the theatre.

Some growers of potatoes throw out all the little ones as more troublesome to take care of than their value. They are now rarely used for seed, as it has been learned by dear experience that many small potatoes are unreliable. Still if not too hurried these small potatoes are worth saving to feed to cows in winter, in connection, of course, with other food.

Milton's vocabulary comprised about 8,000 words, and Shakespeare's about 15,000. Some diligent student of Carlyle has found that in "Sartor Resartus" alone that author used not less than 7,500 distinct words. And as that was one of his earliest works it is more than probable that the gruff old sage of Chelsea had a larger vocabulary than Milton, thus taking the second place in this respect among English authors.

IN A STILL HOUR

Two Learned Men Have a Talk and Come to a Common Conclusion.

"There can be no question as to that," said Dr. P——, who is prominently connected with a certain hospital, to his friend, the House Surgeon, as the two sat having a smoke and a quiet chat in the reception room late on a recent stormy night—"no question at all. Ever since I began practice in that little country village you've heard me speak of, away up near Lake Ontario, thirty years ago, I have felt—in common with all other physicians—the need of a reliable plaster. There are so many diseases—if, indeed, the majority do not come under the rule—for which a good external application is better than remedies pound into a patient's stomach.

"That's so, Doctor, and to show you my faith in your theory, I may say that since I have held my position here, I have opposed the idea of dosing people, except in cases when we were at our wit's end and it seemed to be that or nothing. Some soothing application, if the patient needs anything, combined with rest and good nursing, will do the business—save where cases of accidents require heroic treatment."

"I say, Doctor," said the other, "you can speak of it, or not, just as you like, but in my private practice, when I want anything of the sort, I use BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER. It's a proprietary thing of course, but it is by all odds the best plaster I have ever seen. It is scientifically prepared, quick in taking hold, sure to relieve where relief is possible, and neat as wax to handle. It is just the perfect flower of all that has ever been done in that line. I happen to know, too, that it is being rapidly introduced in the principal hospitals of London, Paris and other leading cities in Europe."

"You needn't fret, my friend," laughed the House Surgeon, "over the chance of being caught in the act of professional puffery. But we use Benson's here every day, and we go much better than that. We find it [illegible] than the bottles are notoriously getting scarce in the house."

Benson's plasters are prepared from the finest POROUS formula by distinguished physicians, and have been in use for over thirty years. They will not be disappointed in the result. In the middle of the counties is over the word CAPCINE. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, New York.
