CAPTAIN ESLINGER TALKS.

He Does Not Anticipate a Change in the Department for Some Time Yet.

About Tuesday night's action of the City Council abolishing the office of police captain, the present incumbent, Captain Eslinger, says that he proposes to abide by the order of the day and police communication in the matter.

"The ordinance before going into effect will have to be signed by the president of the Council and advertised three successive days," continued the ex-lieutenant-captain, "before there can be any action by the mayor in the matter. As the advertisement will not be made to-day, the date of meeting of the board will fall upon the shoulder of the next in rank, Sergeant Wm. C. Wise. In the meantime, however, Mr. Dinger believes that the commission will receive the right of the Council to abolish the office. There are but few of the commissioners in the city at present and therefore their action in the previous one has not by any means, but it is believed that they will be in opposition to the abolition of the police captaincy.

Mr. Eslinger in a talk with a "News" reporter said that he did not anticipate a change in the department for some time yet. While in office he did not think he had done his duty, and if forced to leave the department because of the change in the law, he would leave with the good will of all the members.

WHITE-CAPS INDICTED.

State of South Carolina Dealing With Persecutors of the Saints.

A Herald special from Columbia, S. C., Sept. 22, says: The trial of the white-cappers of Pleasant Elders and converts began in Winnsboro today. Indictments against 19 men, some of them of the best class of farmers, were given to the grand jury. Two cases entered up of the supposed ring leaders were returned.

Forty witnesses are present, including ten women. Two of these are the victims that held up at night and whipped the Mormon Elders escaped from their house.

The testimony of several witnesses is direct against the indicted.

Gentle Nature Rules.

The Gentle Reuben was the scene of extreme beauty last night, the occasion being a social given in honor of the improved Jessee Elders. There were upwards of 50 guests present and a most delightful evening was spent. During the evening vocal solos were rendered by Misses Sadie Bransford and Della Parsons and Mr. John Jones Parry. A baritone recitation by Mr. Parry and the guitar solos by Miss Thurber and Mr. Charles H. Clawson gave a number of extra encores and Mr. Parry responded to the assemblage with a humorous reading. The event was a success in the true sense of the word and the hope is expressed that many more such events could soon be the occasion for entertaining it out.

Idaho Weather and Crops.

Idaho Falls, Idaho, Sept. 21.—The weather of the week ending Monday, September 20, 1897, was unusually cool, especially at night, in parts of the state the temperature on several dates fell especially at night in parts of the state eastern southern section several heavy frost occurred but as the season is still advanced no material damage to the reported except to tender vegetation. The rain fall in the week was very light and scattering.

Threshing was pushed steadily during the week and with very few interruptions will be completed within the next two weeks; potatoes are being gathered in large quantities; the yield is reported very satisfactory. Corn and other vegetables are ready for use. The hay crop with few exceptions is the 2nd cutting of alfalfa.

BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.

The Evil of Trampdom and the Remedy—A Blandless Resolution Necessary.

Farmington, N. M.,
September 5, 1897.

To the Editor:

Whilst wandering along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific railway starting the boxes in Arizona dotted along their sweep, I fell in with the genial transient population perpetually passing to and fro, staying perhaps for a time to work or idle round, then as again, ever restless, ever moving. I observed with those who were not in search of employment a sullen, dogged, unsympathetic mood, a feeling of hopelessness, inanity—one without purpose, condition, ambition or hope, presenting a wonderful study of the want of some grand system of co-operation, some plan of reformation, some acknowledgment of the brotherhood of the race. It was a curious study in a new line. Williams, Arizona, where every train and the railway shed is under charge for employment and the railway officials are kept busy, was the central point for the assembling of men from all parts, whilst to join them in discussing their ideas and plans, to mingle with the genial, kindly hearted and ardent. Many of these men appeared reckless as to their future, careless as to their past, happy as long as they could, many had formed notions of their own troubled condition and the cause of their misfortunes, others whose views went into two standpoints of the "origin of the soul," spontaneously broke out in expressions of one saying he did not believe in annihilation, an undisciplined mass of humanity pervading the country, I mention to become a danger sometime to the peace of this beautiful country.

"I came in on a freight yesterday, by—it a car all night, no food yet, have 75c in my pocket and the hotel charge is $1 and any of the hotels round camp will find me breakfast. If I had ten dollars I would not work this summer. But I have served in the civil wars." These sentences show the unhealthy sentiment in these men, whose ideas of life are not quiet matters for thought and the proper settlement of industry where all may have work and the fruits of their labor. All unemployed men are invited to attend. Bring tithe notice of change of time.

GARBLED HER DAUGHTER'S INTENDED.

A Kentucky Widow Takes a Hand in an Elopement and Loads a Husband.

When a man attempts to elope with the daughter of a widow he should bear in mind the average widow's ability to look out for number one and for daughter in securing No. one. Mrs. Martha Bingham, of Lexington, Ky., was a wise and fair, and she had a pretty daughter of 18. Johnnie Wilson was a young man of 20 years and a widow at least long enough after the death of Mrs. Bruce's daughter for his months to have elapsed. Johnnie and Mrs. Bruce's daughter Ella were said to be engaged. Mrs. Bingham said that her daughter would not give her consent, but she did not object to the young man's calls. He plodded with the widow's consent and without consent, and the engagement of the young people became an open secret.

Last Saturday arrangements were made for the elopement, but the watchful mother observed what was on foot, and at the supper table announced that she and her daughter's room shortly after dark and locked the girl head and foot, and when Johnnie came at 9 o'clock to look for to her own room and told her to be ready, she then returned to the room and locked the door behind her. Johnnie came to steal away his love the widow answered the summons and without disguising her voice informed the young man in the yard. He assisted her into his buggy and drove off with very few persons with the exception of Porter county, where he had arranged with Justice Morris to be married. Arriving at the house they were surprised at the absence of his companion, but as she looked comfortably settled and was evidently dancing with the best man at the time he could do nothing more than caress her now and then over the shoulders of the other dancers. Johnnie came to the conclusion that he would make the best of the situation. He took the bride and left Mrs. Bingham to gather her and that although he thought he was dead in love with Miss Ella he got much a great deal of her handsome mother. Matilda was discovered nestled in her mother's room by a servant girl next morning, and when she learned of the trick her mother had played on her she said that although she was married to Mr. Whitley she is now satisfied she did not. She promises to be dutiful daughter to him.—Chicago Exchange.
