This manuscript Was brought to light by Dr. Leonard Woods in an English country town, an exact copy procured for the Maine Historical Society, which will bring it out a little better feeling at the close of the in two volumes, with copious annotations from the highly competent hands of Charles Desme, of Cambridge, Mass., and of Dr. Woods himself.

On July 1, 1801, seventy years ago, one of the first steamboats ever built made a trial trip on the Thames. This the account of it given by the London papers of the day: "An experiment has taken place on the river for the purpose of working a barge or any other the exception of the Prior, all the crews heavy craft against wind and tide by want smooth water. The boat of the means of a steam engine, of a very simple construction. The moment the engine was set to work, the barge was brought about, answering her helm favorite of the English crews at St. John. The Paris crew is the second make her way against a strong ebb tide favorite, but Americans are backing at the rate of nearly two miles and a the American crews, who are rowing half an hour."

A sensation has been caused in London among the little circle of amiable men and women who have been persuaded to constitute themselves a Na-tional Indian Association in aid of soof a Hindon Brahmin lady with her husband—the first, it is said, who has trodden on British ground. It is a drawback that she cannot speak a word of English, and as Hindostance is a little out of the way of an ordinary English education, there is not much to be gained on either side. A short and stout lady, dressed in all the colors of the rainbow, but scarcely able to walk; gians has arrived here. His majesty visited the international exhibition toher features or a word on her tongue, may be significant, as it is insisted on, of the "beginning of a new ers," but in itself it is rather a depressing than an enlivening object.

One of the street railway companies of Philadelphia is about to introduce cars of a greatly improved style. They are large and handsemely upholatered. The interior is finished in oak; blue glass transoms decrease the entering rays of the sun, and patent reflectors add increased light at night. Patent running gear makes riding a comfort, and some place for the portrait will now be saliedted which will be satisfactory to all parties.
