

LIPPMAN STEPS DOWN AND OUT.

Reverses His Connection With Salt Lake Tribune as Business Manager.

REASONS GIVEN FOR CHANGE.

Promised to Retract Certain Statements, but Owner and Editor Strongly Objected to It.

Joseph Lippman, manager of the Salt Lake Tribune, has stepped down and out. The ways and wherefores of the change are not stated, but it is understood that his resignation is the result of an endeavor by the aforesaid editor to have the Tribune retract certain statements made concerning Commissioner Richards of the general and office prior to and at the time of the opening of the Utah Indian reservation. It is known, too, that for some time past Manager Lippman and Editor Cannon have been at odds.

The Tribune, however, upon him as manager of the paper, and the confidence and good-will of both the stockholders of the paper and its employees.

CAUSE OF RESIGNATION.

As to the cause of the resignation the Herald says it is learned that friction with former Senator Frank J. Cannon, editor of the paper, and complaints with the department of justice in Washington, grew out of the fact that while Mr. Lippman is United States district attorney, the paper of which he was general manager, made violent attacks on Land Commissioner W. A. Richards. The following light on the situation comes to the Herald from Washington:

An official of the department of justice is authority for the statement that United States Attorney Joseph Lippman of Salt Lake was called on by the department to answer three charges when he was in Washington a short time ago. The charges are understood to have emanated from the land office.

First—that he had refused to prosecute certain cases of coal land frauds submitted to him.

Second—that he was retaining the position of general manager of the Salt Lake Tribune while district attorney.

Third—that the paper of which he was general manager had made vicious attacks on the commissioner of the general land office.

MR. LIPPMAN'S EXPLANATION.

In reply to the first charge Mr. Lippman showed that he had submitted the evidence to the federal judge in that district and had been told it was insufficient. He outlined the case to the department, and it was agreed that he would not have been justified in going ahead without more evidence.

As to the second charge, Mr. Lippman produced a letter from Attorney General W. H. Moody, written in 1904, stating there were no objections to his becoming manager of the Tribune.

As to the third charge, Mr. Lippman said he had given his word that the editor would be printed. He found himself in a position where he was unable to keep his promise, and consequently he resigned from the Tribune.

Messrs. Lippman and Kearns have been closely identified in politics ever since 1900. In that year Mr. Lippman took the management of the Kearns campaign for the United States senate, and since that time Mr. Lippman has been Senator Kearns' political manager. He received the appointment of United States district attorney on the expiration of the term of C. O. Whittemore. In June, 1904, he purchased an interest in the Salt Lake Tribune, controlled by Keith and Kearns, and became its manager, succeeding Perry S. Heath. These relations continued until they were severed yesterday.

It is an interesting fact that the Southern States Missionary society has compiled a list of the names and addresses of over 2,000 Elders who have labored in that field. The third annual reunion is to be held at the city of St. Louis, Mo., on Oct. 10, 11 and 12, and an invitation has been mailed to each of the Elders, and all indications promise a very large attendance.

Every one who attends will be sure to meet many old friends and companions and feel again the holy joy of missionary life.

The south has been a peculiarly fruitful field for the Gospel message and the great number of Elders who have labored there and the many thousands of Saints converted there are indeed a mighty host. It is proposed through these annual reunions to keep in touch with as many as possible of the southern Elders and Saints and keep them enthused with the same warm-hearted self-sacrificing spirit that has always characterized the southern mission. The united sympathy and moral support of such a large number of earnest workers cannot but be beneficial to the good cause. Come brethren, attend the reunion and be renewed with your desire to help the work along.

For some time past the general board of the Young Men's Mutual improvement association has been discussing the advisability of organizing a class for the study of the Manual, believing that there are many in Salt Lake City and vicinity who would be pleased to avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded. With this end in view a meeting has been called for Monday, Oct. 2, at 7:30 p. m. in room 21, B. Y. Memorial building, to which stake superintendents, their counselors and class leaders are earnestly invited. At this meeting the matter will be discussed in all its bearings, and if justified by the general assembly will be organized with Elder B. H. Roberts as instructor. Bishops in the stakes in and adjacent to Salt Lake City are kindly asked to make this announcement in their ward meetings.

JOSEPH W. MCMURRIN, BRIANT W. HINCKLEY, Committee.

SHAPING OF OUR EARLY HISTORY.

Six Noble Volumes That Contain Diplomatic Correspondence of The Revolution.

INTERESTING STORY TOLD.

New Light Thrown on Various Episodes in the Formation of the United States Government.

Special Correspondence.

Washington, Sept. 23.—Facts partially stated can be understood only partially. The life of the 'Crist could not be comprehended without the four Gospels because such writer gives his synopsis; his partial side of the story; or the whole story, as seen from his standpoint. Only when reasons are given for the movements of the prominent actors on the world's stage, can the facts of history be understood.

The history which gives us only the movements of the armies during the Revolutionary war, is incomplete history. That only can be a perfect narrative which gives to us the reasons why Washington, Gates and the other generals moved as they did, and which tells us all about the resources upon which those armies and officials depended for their maintenance.

A CENTURY PASSED.

Fully a century elapsed before the Congress authorized the publication of the Diplomatic Correspondence of the Revolution. Without an understanding of which no complete history can be written. The publication is in six volumes; the edition is exhausted; very few copies of the original are left.

It is a knowledge of the history of the Revolution which is essential to a proper understanding of our revolutionary history, and of the troubles executed during, and at the close of, the Revolution, which form in a large measure, the basis of our international law. This correspondence shows the movement of the French revolution in 1776 to supercede Washington by Marshal Broghe; the movement of the American revolutionists in 1787 to induce Washington's withdrawal, and to have Franklin recalled from Paris; the atrocities of British troops, and of refugees in the United States; the claims of our diplomats, as a claim against Great Britain and a set-off against British claims for indemnity to loyalists, the extent to which the fisheries were controlled by American fishermen, prior to the Revolution; and, what is still more important, how general was the understanding between the negotiators that the treaty of 1787 was not a treaty by concession by Great Britain, but of partition, under which the United States retained all the territorial rights previously possessed by them in North America, when part of the British empire.

SHOWS THE INTRIGUES.

It also shows the intrigues against Washington, and sets forth the unique majority of American fishermen, which those who intrigued against him, when they came into his presence and saw him in the solitude of his grandeur, if not become, as was the case with De Kuth, his adherents, and to suddenly acquiesce in the supremacy which they were forced to concede.

It further shows the character of George III for falsehood and dissimulation, and gives that letter of Franklin's, in which he says of Arnold: "He seems to mix as naturally with that polished court (England) as pitch with tar."

Careful perusal of these interesting, as well as valuable volumes makes it very clear that our diplomacy was in great measure financial economy. We required funds which would inspire France with confidence and Great Britain with dread. By the use of arguments, drawn from finance and war, our diplomatists sustained themselves in the discussions with neutral powers.

Franklin, in Paris, was a sub-secretary of the treasury, negotiating loans, and not merely our diplomatic agent.

SILAS DEANE WROTE.

For example, under date of Nov. 29, 1776, Silas Deane wrote to the committee on secret correspondence: "Let me by every letter urge on you the sending of a quantity of tobacco, rice, flour and wheat, and of every kind of household goods of this kind, as they are wanted in France, besides the demands in other Kingdoms." And, in another letter, he says:

"A man of six or eight millions will probably enable you to finish the war. This, I am confident, may be negotiated on the terms which I will propose. The present contest has engaged the attention of all Europe in favor of the United States; the Russians on the north and Portugal on the south, excepted; I make no consideration of the mercenary little electorates in my calculation. You may see, and recognize the tale of the bearskin in the fable, but, at the same time, you must be sensible that your wants are real, and that you can be induced to relieve them, if it is indifferent to you, whether they have the consideration in hand, or in prospect."

MUCH IN EARNEST.

It seems absurd today, but Mr. Deane was very much in earnest when he wrote: "I trace the Ohio river from its junction to its head, to Lake Erie, Fort Detroit; thence west to the Mississippi; and return to the place of departure. These three lines of near a thousand miles each, include an immense territory, in a fine climate, well watered, and, by accounts, exceedingly fertile. It is not inhabited by any European of consequence, and the tribes of Indians are inconsiderable, and will increase faster than the lands can possibly be called for cultivation."

VAST EMPIRE DISCOVERED.

The vast empire is thus well described, and then he proceeds to give it away to give away Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, three magnificent states: "To this I ask your attention as a resource for defraying the expenses of the whole war." Then he tells how a company should be formed, the congress retaining one-fifth interest in the scheme. He says:

"These are the outlines of a proposed grant, which you see, contains more than 25,000,000 acres of land, the one-fifth of which, if settlement is carried on vigorously, will soon be of prodigious value. At this time a company might be formed in France, Germany, etc., who would form a stock of $100,000 to defray the expense of this settlement. You want money, and by holding up thus early to view, a certain fund on which to raise it, even, the most certain in the world, that of land security, you may obtain the loan, and engage the monied interests of Europe in your favor. I have spoken with many persons of good sense on this subject, which makes me the more sanguine."

OFFERED TO SELL.

Just think of it! He proposed to sell three sovereign states for $500,000. In Chicago, or in any one of a score of cities now flourishing in that domain, there are hundreds of men who can write their checks for that amount of money any day; and there are several there now who would cheerfully give that amount to their country, if it were needed. But, honest old Silas Deane could not foresee, nor even imagine, what tremendous probabilities there were in that 25,000,000 acres.

STOLEN PAPERS.

Arthur Lee, while at Berlin, June 26, 1777, wrote that his bureau had been broken up and some papers stolen. He fixes the crime upon the English ambassador:

"Upon being informed that I was gone to the governor, and that suspicion fell upon one of his servants, the ambassador went away in great confusion; and, in half an hour, the portfolio, with all the papers, was laid down at the door, and the person put off undisturbed. The examinations taken show that his servant repeatedly told other servants that his master would give 2,000 ducats for my papers. The return of the papers (those which he particularly wanted) not having been left in my bureau, disappointed him of his object, while the whole odium rests upon him. Public ministers have been regarded as spies. Mr. Elliott (British ambassador) will give them the title of robbers."

The second did not dare to look an American citizen in the face. Two years later, Paul Jones wrote to La Fayette: "I must tell you that Mr. Elliott was furious when he found my business at Copenhagen, and that I was received with great distinction at court and in all the best societies in Denmark. Every time I was invited to sup with the king, Elliott made an apology, he shut himself up for more than a month, and then left town."

These very interesting excerpts from the diplomatic history of the Revolution but slightly set forth the value of the publication; and the volumes can only Saved His Life.

J. W. Davenport, whose name is well known to all, writes, dated June 14, 1892: "I want to tell you I believe Ballard's Snow Lintment saved my life. I was under the treatment of two doctors and they told me one of my lungs was utterly gone, and the other badly affected. I also had a lump in my side. I don't think that I could have lived over two months longer. I was induced by a friend to try Ballard's Snow Lintment. The first application gave me great relief, two days later the lump was gone, and the other lung was cured. I am now in good health and well. It is a wonderful medicine and I recommend it to suffering humanity." 2c. per tin. Sold by Z. C. M. J. Drug Dept. B.
