THE KAISER AS A READER.
The Kaiser has two secretaries employed in little else than supplying his table with magazines, newspapers, and books. Those passages are marked with green pencil to which his majesty's special attention is to be called. His taste is universal. He is a soldier, a landlord, a sailor, a huntsman, and sportsman, an artist, a mechanic, above all a politician, and on all these subjects books, etc., come pouring to his table, which he manages to run through in a fashion, and can assimilate their contents faster than most men. He is a wonderful newspaper reader.—Golden Balfour.
