WHAT IT SAYS.

The address as it finally left the committee's hands contains about 3,000 words. It presents in perfect and plain language the view taken of the work of the Republican party generally, and those issues which have been before the country for years. It also gets down to business in the presentation of nominating presidential electors, which is one of the two duties of the coming interest to Republicans and all other voters.

ADDRESS TO MCKINLEY ELECTORS.

On the matter of electors for casting the vote for the presidential ticket, it is advised that regular party electors, designated the national party nominees be put in nomination. This, the committee holds, is the only honorable thing to one voting, because it relations with the national and State organizations. The party must be preserved intact, and the committee would not recommend otherwise under any circumstances. The address says:

> Individual action from time to time has been manifested in the state, which, if persisted in, would result in the defeat of the ticket and the party. Such action is not to be commended, and we trust that it will not be repeated. Every voter should be willing to support the ticket nominated by the party of his choice, and we believe that the great majority of the voters of this state will do so.

INDIVIDUAL ACTION FELT.

For some time past there have been strong indications of an undesirable element on the part of some of the democrats to insist that every voter who would not pledge his ballot to McKinley should be compelled to support the populistic party schemes and contentions. This would have left the effect of compelling out of the party a host of silver Republicans who stand pat on all points of the national platform except that on coinage, but are firmly set against that.

Whatever may have been the desire of some of the committee, there is nothing in the address to indicate a wish of the kind followed in. There is no barring out of anybody by requiring the test of a declaration of thoughtfulness. There is full recognition, so far as the address is concerned, for perfect harmony on state tickets and issues, while no restriction is placed on individual action. If voters who are Republicans are accepted as such in primaries and conventions choose to vote on several tickets. The committee was unanimous in adopting the address as it has outlined, as that all Republicans could unite.

PROTECTION AND FREE SILVER.

The address makes out with no uncertain declaration in favor of protection and free silver as essential to the prosperity of the people of the United States. This issue is clearly defined throughout, and with the reports and subsequent platform were which Democrats of the State will stand. The record for McKinley election is one that can be a source of encouragement to the less affluent.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The points of the call is to make all Republicans to the State open every issue in the State party, and so that every member of the party may be heard from before the
