History tells us that in 1812 the Russian Fur company established a military outpost north of Redoubt Bay on the California coast above Fort Francisco, as a trading post, as well as a base of supplies, such as beef, flour, etc., for their men engaged in fur hunting. This colony, or mission of Russian soldiers, was established in 1812 or 1813, and was situated on the coast...

BUNCO MEN STILL HERE.

Their Latest Victim a Profranchise Tourist Who Complained to the Police.

The plating bureau priced walls of the gang of low and arrow bunco charge did not by any manner of means remove from public records all the size thing manipulators in this city. In fact it only took the hands of a few of them. There were many more in the community who are constantly being preyed upon. Transient together almost as soon as they arrive in the city. Tricks are being turned every day in the most cunning manner possible. Only a small percentage of the same are reported to the police as to the great majority of cases the "victim" prefers to suffer his loss in silence than to "blow" it. Even when a victim is found who is willing to give information the sharpest almost invariably find a way of "forgetting" the matter and that course as a rule is satisfactory to both sides as it obviates the necessity which attaches to a court inquiry.

A VETERAN'S TESTIMONY.

Among the First to Reach Navajo, One of the Last to Leave.

The Tragic Journey to Utah and Experience There to Early Years—An Interesting Story.

HORTONSMITH, Henry C., Utah, September 11, 1894.

In looking over the account of the journey of the Battalion boys, the Indians and the Indian war veterans, it brings to mind many facts and scenes of long ago. I am not a Battalion boy nor one of the 141. However, I was in the body of the Battalion when they left on a short and arduous journey, but I was soon being fitted myself up and trying to help the poor who were left behind. Merrill and I, T. Le Haven had charge of the Navajo Temple, exhibiting it to strangers until it was burned. I remained at Navajo until the spring of 1890, when I started with my family to follow the high trail to the mountains. On arriving at Kanabville I found that the children had broken out amongst our people and I was compelled to slip them and to return to Kanabville. The winter, which I did until the spring of 1891, when I prepared to finish my journey to the mountains. On account of the high water it was not possible to go around the head waters of the Kanab and Jump Fork, and it took some time to make the journey. There are many now living who remember the first part of my journey, for I was with them for a long time. We arrived at Salt Lake City the 1st of October, having been nearly four months on the trail. There are many incidents of that journey that would look well in print. The first twenty (20) years of my life I spent in the mountains of the Frontier of among the Indians. I became identified with the children in 1881, moved to Kanabville in 1882, but then in the Kanabville in 1885, was among the first at Navajo and to leave there, so have known practically all the children and Navajo tribes, the Indian and other ways in Utah and now at almost everybody two years of age and still remember my own voice with yours in the great world. But my hands have done their work and I am fast hearing that matter hard to meet those dear friends who have gone before me; and I am still, as I always have been, firm in the faith of the true and everlasting Gospel taught to us through the Prophet Joseph Smith.
