Hygiene for Centurians.

We are going to tell you a hundred years old, you, I and all the rest of us.

The doctors are beginning to permit it—perhaps nothing, the day comes, that they themselves will thereby gain several extra weeks at it.

They are even telling us how they may reach out our century naturally. A writer in The Medical Age says the case of George B. Davis, who lived to be ninety-two.

He says that Davis's long life and remarkable preservation of his powers, mental and physical, were due to his outdoor exercise and his moderation, whatever the last two were.

In summing up the cheerful century of years which we may enjoy, the doctor in The Medical Age says people should be young till they are fifty, and, in their prime, till seventy or seventy-five, with life's work completed at ninety.

The years from that till they are a hundred they may spend in having a good time, having their earned it.

Following are the golden rules of life, the doctor gives to people who desire and expect to live a century.

First—Always be as healthy as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Second—Always be as cheerful as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Third—Always be as active as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Fourth—Always be as clean as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Fifth—Always be as kind as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Sixth—Always be as honest as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Seventh—Always be as brave as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Eighth—Always be as patient as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Ninth—Always be as forgiving as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Tenth—Always be as cheerful as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Eleventh—Always be as active as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.

Twelfth—Always be as clean as you can, never being a day, week, month, or year without something to do.
