

THE EVENING NEWS

Bradlaugh's "Mission" and Anti-Biography.

Reporter—What will be your subject?

Mr. Bradlaugh—I shall, of course, speak of the prospects of Republicanism in Europe in one or two lectures; but another will be devoted to the impeachment of the Brunswick family.

Reporter—You have given them some hard words, and you mean to know how they will take it.

Mr. Bradlaugh—There is in Great Britain a very large party who favor my views, and it is daily increasing.

Reporter—What is your opinion of Mr. Bradlaugh (laughing)?

Mr. Bradlaugh (laughing)—They are no more than charges I shall bring against them. I intend to offer an opinion in regard to the right of the Brunswick family to the throne of Great Britain. The view I take is as old as time, and when that time comes I will be glad to state it.

Reporter—What is your opinion of Mr. Bradlaugh's hereditary right to the throne?

Mr. Bradlaugh—I maintain that the monarchy is a relic of the times of the Middle Ages, and that it is a relic which should be abolished.

Reporter—Now for the charges.

Mr. Bradlaugh—I need not mention them categorically, but I will speak first of the burden of taxation which has been forced to bear. Taxes have increased of all proportion during the reign of the Brunswick family. Before their time we were paying £17,000,000; now we are paying £70,000,000.

Reporter—You will, of course, refer to the eccentricities of the Prince of Wales?

Mr. Bradlaugh—Oh, yes; but I shall say nothing of his private life, except where it affects public conduct. The personal vices of this family have been productive of more loss to the nation than the water-works and the railways.

Reporter—How came it that you were a member of the Chartist movement?

Mr. Bradlaugh—My education was finished before I was eleven. Three years later, while clerk to a coal firm in Britania Fields, the excitement of the Chartist movement was at its height in England. Meetings were held all day, Sundays, and every night, in the open fields. They were occupied in discussions of theological, social, and political subjects, and were being allowed to take part.

Reporter—You were not an able man at that time?
