

memory is about to be erected. Eighteen years of Rousseau's letters are about to be published. Finally the membership of the Geneva Rousseau society has just received an important addition in the person of Count Leo Tolstoy. In his letter accepting membership in the society, Tolstoy says: "Rousseau has been my master since I was 15. His works and the Holy Gospel have been the two great and beneficent influences that have affected my life. Rousseau does not grow old, quite lately I re-read some of his works and I felt the same elevation of the soul and the same admiration that I experienced when reading him in the days of my youth."

NEW ROUSSEAU LETTERS.

The new Rousseau letters, which are about to be published, all have to do with the susceptible philosopher's regard for Madame d'Houdetot, and have been preserved by a member of that lady's family. In one of them, 15 or 20 pages long, Rousseau gives his views on the nature of friendship and in another discusses his feelings in regard to death which he then believed to be near. There is no doubt that the documents were written in great candor of mind and their eloquent and convincing what is written in the "Confessions" as to that period of Rousseau's life. It was at Montmorency, where the Rousseau statue is about to be erected, that the d'Houdetot episode happened. The writer's marriage there was given to him by Madame d'Epigny, and Grimm prophesied that he would presently have reason to repent of the gift, a prediction which proved correct.

BOOK RAISED A STORM.

The Rev. Dr. J. Edgar Bee's book, "The Last Things," which evoked such a storm of protest from ultra-orthodox folk that the author withdrew it from circulation a few days after its first appearance, is about to be reissued. That step has been preceded by Dr. Bee's resignation as head of the Wesleyan college at Richmond. He practically was told that he would have to give up his book or his book and has now decided to stick to his book, which, he says, "God has blessed more than any other I have written." However, that may be, for, of course, it is a matter on which no more layman is competent to offer an opinion. It is certain that the efforts of narrow theologians to prevent the other thing to do will increase public interest in the work. Dr. Bee, who is one of the greatest figures in the Methodist world, will, it will be remembered, once be at the University of Chicago and is affiliated at the Chautauque and Ocean Grove summer schools in 1906.

THE PRINCIPLE THAT BOOK REVIEWERS SHOULD BE PLACED IN A GOING STATEFULLY IN ENGLAND.

The latest journal of prominence to adopt it is the Manchester Guardian, in which hereafter every important notice will bear the initials of the writer. The Guardian is an important convert to the new faith, for it devotes about as much space to literary matters as any journal in Great Britain.

Americans Winning Fight With England's Parliament.

LONDON, June 14.—Although Lord Stanley, postmaster general of the British government, is opposing the establishment of an extensive pneumatic tube service in greater London there is fair reason to suppose it will be authorized by parliament before its adjournment this session. Americans dominate the situation in that they control both of the larger companies which are asking for the franchise. One of these is headed by J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., and has a capitalization of $25,000,000. This company controls the patents of V. C. Hatcher, chief engineer of the Hatcher Pneumatic Tube company, New York and Philadelphia. The other company is promoted by John H. Millholland who was instrumental in the establishment of the pneumatic systems used by the United States postoffice department in several large cities. Hearings upon this question before a select committee of both houses of parliament are numerous, and the opposition of the London county council and other bodies will be strong. In view of the strength of the business demands on the part of the largest retail dealers and the solid character of the shareholders in the enterprise, the discussion has resolved into a fight of public demand against red tape. One of the American promoters says: "Lord Stanley's opposition is effective so far as the postoffice department is concerned as he has a practical monopoly on the rights and privileges in his official capacity. It would be ridiculous to pay a separate fee for postoffice business as postoffice matter could be sent in sealed packages. The little before parliament, practically ask for the same thing. We wish to lay about a hundred miles of tube in the metropolitan district with the stations situated at intervals of not more than a quarter of a mile from the next nearest one. We now have a prospective guaranteed business of nearly a hundred million parcels annually from the largest of London's retail emporiums. I believe that fully 20 per cent of the small parcel traffic of London will be transported through tubes. This would take away fully 25 per cent of the vehicular traffic of the streets. Londoners are notoriously slow in adopting any modern improvement of a public utility character and while we may be delayed in securing the proper authority I believe the present parliament will take favorable action before its adjournment."

CHINA'S GREATEST REFORMER.

Kang Yu Wei, who is one of China's greatest reformers and students, is now in this country. Kang Yu Wei is on his way around the world to study western civilization, with a view to introducing reforms in the empire of China. He was former adviser of the emperor of China and president of the Chinese Empire Reform association. Kang Yu Wei has done a great deal for his country and its people, especially the children, by introducing schools and having them conducted on the western lines.

American Peers Who Enjoys House Hunting.

LONDON, June 14.—That Dorchester House has been put in such excellent condition for the occupancy of the new American ambassador, Whitelaw Reid, is due largely to the interest which Lady Dufferin of Marlborough has taken in the work. She went over the place thoroughly before the leasehold agreement was signed and devoted the best part of a fortnight to thoroughly exploring every nook and corner of the Italian palace in Park lane. She discovered some defects in the plumbing and had them remedied. She was on the premises so frequently giving directions how things should be done that the decorators concluded she must be the ambassador's wife.

Her services were rendered gratuitously. House-hunting, which most folk regard as an unmitigated nuisance, the American duchess really enjoys. As it is a fact which of necessity she must find comparatively few opportunities to indulge in on her own account, her services are always at the disposal of her friends—particularly those from the other side of the Atlantic. Her selections are always well made. She knows Mayfair and the grovia as few women know these fashionable quarters, and not the most witty of house agents or landlords can improve upon her. When she appears on the scene it is no use holding out for fancy prices.

Her knowledge of what constitutes a desirable residence is not confined to mere externals. In the important matter of plumbing and ventilation she is something of an expert. Among the less scrupulous class of agents and landlords who have found that her knowledge of sanitation exceeds their powers of deception the sobriquet of the "sanitary inspector" has been bestowed on her. She has all the London county council's bylaws and regulations with respect to construction and drainage at her finger ends and where she discovers that they have been disregarded insists that they shall be conform with under penalty of lodging information against the delinquent. Some house agents who do not like her critical methods say that she charges a commission for making investigations, but I have been told by some of the best firms in London that this is not true. She spends both time and money freely on her job. That she is possessed of exquisite taste in the matter of furniture and house decorations is shown by her own residence. Deeply into her work, which she has transformed into one of the most beautiful homes in the country. Though thrice married and thrice widowed she is still young, middle aged and looks younger than she really is. From her first and American husband she gained riches; from her second rank and from her third, Lord William Russell, a very complete but not a domestic figure. It was by this third marriage she had her only child—a boy—and now the idol of her life.

ANTITOXIN FOR LAZINESS.

Dr. Wolfgang Weichardt of Berlin has discovered an antitoxin for physical exhaustion and consequent laziness. The muscles after physical exertion contain a poison, which he extracts in the form of brown needles, and keeps in sealed tubes, preferably in liquid air. This toxin, when injected into guinea pigs, produces symptoms of exhaustion. It cannot be got from the muscles of unexhausted animals. With it he obtains an antitoxin from horses after the manner of diphtheria anti-

Phillips? I was an ignorant kid, and our editorial on Louis Philippe started in next morning's paper in this way: "Today is the anniversary of the birth of Sam Phillips. Who the dickens is Sam Phillips? This illustrious—and so on."

"Once I spoiled the quotation of a beautiful poem," said another compositor. "My love is like a red, red rose. It should have been rose."

The third compositor smiled. "I was once setting up an advance notice of a state fair," he said. "I made a paragraph read: 'There will also be a punning competition, including stonewall pumps, water pumps, and other varieties.' A lot of pump makers wrote to find out about this competition. It was a mistake. For 'pump' 'jump' should have been put."

"When I was on the Star," said a third man, "I got a dog story some how mixed up with the presentation of a cup to a crier. The thing ran: 'The people gave their beloved pastor, along with the cup, a well-dressed parrot. He, after thanking them, howled and ran like the wind down Chestnut street, then up Ninth to Race, where some boys caught him and tied a tin can to his tail. Away he went again, down Ninth street out Market, and at corner of Thirteenth street he was shot by a policeman.'"
