How Paupers Feed in China.

A hardy naked savage is not an object of pity. The self-denial of a hardworking Yankee mechanic is compensated by hope; but the poverty of the sated by hope; but the poverty of the Chinese paupers is unqualified, unparalleled and hopeless. Benjamin Franklin, indeed, assures us that no man ever repents of having miased a meal, but in the great Middle Kingdom the author of that dictum would forteit his claim to the title of a philosopher. Even in a climate where sunlight is a food surrogate, $0,000,000 of our fellowmen suffer the ever-present misery of mainutrition by being restricted to a barely half sufficient quantity of half-digestible food.

In Canton nobody dreams of cleaning the markets, or, a la Mexice, tolerating vultures for that purpose. The paupers pick the offai in haif an hour better than an army of ants could do it in half a year. They make soup out of come splinters and shreds of skin, boil cabbage stalks, tursip leaves, potato peels, and the refuse roots of chanting tubers, scrape the fragments of banana skins, and store up every crumb and grain of spilled rice. In the selection of their food they have learned to follow experience rather than their sense of taste, and do not shrink from the most disgusting flavor of any substance suspected of nutritious properties.

As the beasts of the desert congregate at a spring, the population of China gravitates toward the sea shore, seeking in the waters the sustenance which the land denies them. They are wretched sailors, but their junks cover the western Pacific, and near the coast they spare no kind of fish or mollusk. In all larger seaport towns there are special venders of kwang or fish entrals. Stale kwang forms also the principal food of the hairless dogs which Shanghai and Canton fatten in such monstrous numbers.—Prof. Felix S. Oswald.

The London Plane Tree.

To those who are interested in the arborial decoration of London it must be very gratifying to observe how that truly admirable tree, "the London plane," has triumphed over the adverse influences of the late scorching weather which has left its marks on all other kinds of trees, such as elms, oaks and limes, the foliage of which has been shrivled up and more or less destroyed, while the "London plane" stands out conspicuous in retaining its beautiful foliage in all its charming brightness, as may be seen, not only in its parks and squares, but also in the most dense and confined parts of the city, where it so happily displays its marvelous capabilities in resisting every kind of adverse influence.

By some special, happy constitution in the nature of this graceful tree, it not only thrives in smoke-laden air, but, judging from the brilliant and vigorous growth of its foliage, it absolutely appears to enjoy combatting with those destructive influences that are an unfortunately inevitable result of our rapidly expanding towns. These facts ought to cause those who have to do with the care and decoration of our towns to extend the planting of this most graceful tree in every situation where space can be found for it. I have used the term "London plane" to distinguish this admirable tree, as it so happily confers so much much beautyon its squares, parks and streets.—London Times.

THE TRIFLES OF LAFE.

Just previous to the opening of the meeting Sir Isaac Walpole, who had his left shoe off to cool a bunnon, got his foot in the way of Elder Toot's No. Ils, and the result was a spirited little affair, in which Sir Isaac had his nose roughly used and the Elder found three of his front teeth loosened. Blows had scarcely been exchanged, however, before both old patriots extended their hands with words of apology, and while Sir Isaac falriy begged on the Elder to step on his bunion all the rest of the week, the Elder was earnest in his hope that Sir Isaac would loosen all the rest of his molars.

"Which goes to prove," said Brother Gardner, as he referred to the matter when the meeting had opened, "dat de trifles of life anney us fur mo' dan de solld trubbles.
