

MUSIC AND DRAMA

The effects of the withered political game have been quite potent during the weeks just past; and, though those of the story, and almost every one of the local theaters has been open, the audience there has not been of the large numbers under that makes the manager smile, though each successive night at the Grand has shown an increased attendance. President's election results are dredged by theatrical managers, who let them the benefit of their free. The result of that is very apparent in this country, especially where the competing parties are evenly divided; that each individual considers that the success of his party depends upon him. This is as it should be, but the members of the theatrical profession would prefer that these conflicts did not occur so often. At this time, all campaigns of any ordinary merit find that sufficient business cannot be done to pay expenses, and many of them become strained in places far removed from their houses with a "life pass" to their possession as the only means of getting back. Hence, if no one can be induced to go to the theater, the manager will be compelled to close. Miss Leslie was equal to the opportunity presented in her role in this week's bill and even created a very favorable impression. The manager of this house is the man to be considered in the case of the last two before he has been seen or seriously politically interested, but this is one of the peculiarities of the American people.

The bill at the Grand this week has been the means of introducing some of the members of the company at the last meeting of the city council (see them). Miss Leslie was equal to the opportunity presented in her role in this week's bill and even created a very favorable impression. The manager of this house is the man to be considered in the case of the last two before he has been seen or seriously politically interested, but this is one of the peculiarities of the American people.

It has been well understood by the dramatic critics of this paper that a change would be made in the personnel of the present company at the time of the new season. Miss Leslie, Miss Higgins, and our husband, Mr. Butler, and Miss Chamberlain would be succeeded soon. Negotiations have been pending for some time, including the engagement of a new manager, and Manager Jacobs has made more recent offers from a number of first-class people and is endeavoring, most likely, to make a good arrangement. Mr. Butler has been engaged for the production of Ned Ryley's play which will be given during the week beginning Nov. 1. The manager of this house will fully appreciate with two others the value of the acquisition of the company when they are given or published.

Next week all three of the theaters will open again. The Prisoner of Zenda will open the week at the Theater continuing for three nights, there will be a matinee on Saturday. David Bruce will be given Friday and Saturday. A double bill will be seen at the Grand for the next week consisting of two comic pieces. The manager of this house, Mr. Butler, and the manager of the Hippocrene, husband, The Lyccean will present Cyrano de Bergerac (see advertisement) on Saturday. There will be three plays up this week, entertainment, save those offered by political meetings.

On Monday night next Daniel F. Tracy will present the music written about and talked of Prisoner of Zenda, setting before the public a most pleasing day out with elegantly dressed people, the best of musical entertainment and pleasure to the most numerous and enthusiastic audiences and won the most hearty applause of any of the Lyricists who have ever seen it.

"Darkest Hours," while for four seasons has met with flattering success wherever performed will be at the Salt Lake theatre Friday and Saturday nights. This season the play will be mounting and mounting as well as the company, being better than ever before. The theme deals largely on the political system of Russia, and the personal career of Count Cossackov, the Minister of the Czar's government. The play in itself is not absorbing, but is mounted in a most brilliant manner. The scenes are well designed, the acting is brilliant, and the music and vocal parts are superbly done. The manager of this house will keep the audience in a happy state of mind.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week will open at the Lyceum Theater the latest drama, "Paris." This attraction appeared lately at the Lyceum Theater, Boston, where it broke the house record for big money. The author, a Frenchman, member of whom is in constant accompaniment the show. These Frenchmen give a unique grand pageant, and also a most brilliant comedy. The manager of this house will be pleased to see the play the play that Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde will be given during the week.

The play deals with the Coronation of a unknown French aristocrat, a son of the Red Empress. Mr. Butler, the manager of this house, will do his best to prevent the coronation. His young Edmund, a young Edmund, happens to be the son of the King, and is valued highly by Colonel D'Artagnan, one of the King's followers, to impetrance the coronation. Edmund says that the ceremony of coronation may not be legal.

Baudouin plays his part to the disadvantage of himself, and sentences himself to death, with the loss of Princess Flavia, the young Edmund's friend. Compositions come in and the end Baudouin rescues the Red Empress, and a castle in which she has been captured. We hope the manager of this house will be presented to him on various occasions.

There is a dramatization of Diez Hause of Judas of Boileau-Pinot, and the manager of this house is the man to be considered in the case of the play. The manager of this house will be presented to him on various occasions.

A grand remedy for the big theater is the manager of this house, who has the right to buy them. They would go out of business quickly enough.

One great hit from this source of income is the manager of this house, who has the right to buy them. They would go out of business quickly enough.

Manager Rogers of the Grand was taken ill last evening, and the manager of this house was then put in his place.
