A FIELD DAY IN THE SENATE.

The Senate of the United States was yesterday the scene of a discussion the contemplation of which takes one back in imagination to the ante bellum days when, under the inspiration of some great national requirement, the chamber rang with the glowing words of Webster, Calhoun and Clay. Mere partisanism was not there for the nonce; the welfare of special sections of the country were not mentioned; the advancement of any particular class was seemingly not thought of; and if the Democratic party, the Republican party, or any other particular organization was named, the wires have failed to bring us a statement of the occurrence.

The occasion was the consideration of Senator Morgan's resolution recognizing the belligerent rights of the struggling Cubans. The speeches in favor were made by Senators Cannon, Lindsay and Foraker, in the order named, and by Senator Hoar in opposition. It was the Ohio senator's second effort as such officer, and even in the light of a brief synopsis it is safe to say that it was a fine one. All of the affirmative efforts glowed with a fervor which was more than patriotic; they were appeals to humanity and that broader and better justice which is not circumscribed by law or hampered by rules, and were couched in such language and delivered with such energy, as is rarely of late years a distinguishing feature of any discussion in that body. The effect must be gratifying in a double sense to the great body of the American people, as showing that the Senate can be equal to the ideals which tradition and fealty create, and as voicing a sentiment which is undoubtedly entertained in this country by at least three out of every four.

As to whether the resolution will pass or not, this is a difficult if not impossible question to settle in advance. Those senators who are opposed to it are in some cases vehement in their opposition, and they are not wholly destitute of ground to stand upon either. In this connection it is only fair to refer to the speech in opposition by Senator Hoar. The venerable Massachusetts statesman could scarcely be expected to be as impulsive and vigorous in advocacy or denunciation of any measure as his more youthful colleagues are; but he brings to his work a ripe experience, an inherent dignity, a profound education and a disposition to give both sides a hearing which must not be ignored. The prevailing American view is, as previously stated, against him, but that is no reason why his voice should not be heard and his utterances given respectful, earnest attention. His was the effort of an international lawyer whose familiarity with the codes and rules of procedure has become so thorough that sentimentality and bare-building are apparently unknown quantities. If so with the Cubans; they are unable and unwilling to look upon the gallant struggle of the Cubans for independence in the light of an abstract question of law or a concrete question of morbid sentiment. They look upon Weyler's administration as one of savagery and ruin such as all civilized and enlightened peoples should denounce and hasten to put an end to; they regard his executions as murders, his destruction of property as wanton vandalism, and his whole official career as being cruel, barbarous and bloody to a degree scarcely ever transcended by the uncivilized races. With such divergence of opinion a forecast of the result would be mere speculation, but the vote will soon be taken and we shall all be advised of it without delay. None in recent sessions has been looked for with greater interest.

THE QUESTION OF THESSALY.

The real danger of the situation in the Levant at present seems to be the possible infusion of a religious element into it. If, as reported from Vienna, the sheik-ul-Islam has declared it to be the will of Allah that Turkey hold Thessaly, and if the European powers are determined not to yield to this demand, it is evident that the conflagration in the east is not yet under control. It is hardly probable, though, that the sultan should jeopardize his position by a serious refusal to accept the terms of the powers, notwithstanding the sanctions of his ecclesiastical advisers. But it is more than likely that the very suggestion of the sheik, backed no doubt by a firm popular conviction, may cause difficulties in arriving speedily at a definite understanding as to the conditions of peace.

The declaration of the mufti-ulemans is in direct line with the teachings of Mohammedism relative to the propagation of the faith by means of the sword—a doctrine which may not have been taught originally by Mohammed but which certainly has been insisted upon by his successors. It is in line with the doctrine more or less openly taught, that Christians and all "unbelievers," by rejecting the light offered the world through Mohammed, have become so criminally guilty that their lives have no worth or value whatever. If the removal of Christianity, according to the Moslemian view, is one of the highest duties in the interest of a supposedly more pure religion, it is evident that, in the same view, to give up Thessaly to the rule of the Christians, after the province has been taken by the sword, would be equivalent to the throwing away of a grand opportunity to serve Allah. It will require strong pressure to brush this logic, particularly when the possession of a whole province is involved. What will the powers do if their representatives are seriously told to discuss the question of Thessaly, not with the sublime porte but with Allah?

A CHANGE NEEDED.

The News does not care to criticise judicial officers or public prosecutors if there can be any reasonable excuse for avoiding it, for the incumbents of such positions have a difficult duty to perform. Nevertheless there are times when judges and prosecuting attorneys need reminding of their obligations to the public, and such a time appears now in the handling of criminal cases in Salt Lake and other counties. Affairs have arrived at such a point that the criminal laws are almost a farce because of the ridiculously light sentences imposed for serious crimes. In cases where the law has contemplated severe punishment, but has given the court a very wide discretion so as to include a light grade of offenses in the same class, it has become almost the rule to let off offenders with a fine or with a few days' or weeks' imprisonment, when the ends of justice and the public weal demand a term in the State prison; and in some cases where the court has not been allowed sufficient latitude under the law to make the punishment light, the public prosecutor has come to the rescue in the most obliging fashion, in the criminal, and has reduced the grade of the offense to make matters easy.

There are several classes of crimes that have been decidedly on the increase lately; and, by a coincidence which is out at all strange to those who observe such matters closely, it is notable that these same classes of offenses are those in which excessive leniency has been shown. It is not asked that courts be arbitrary or severe in any case; that is equally reprehensible with a course the other extreme. But it is insisted that criminal cases should be dealt with in the spirit of the law-makers, who represent the people in the framing of the criminal statutes. For instance, when the crime of burglary is committed, it is wholly inconsistent in a public prosecutor to reduce the charge to petit larceny in order to get the accused to plead guilty, when if the attorney were to do the work he is paid for a conviction on the graver charge would be secured justly; and if the offense be of a character that affects public morality or safety, a judge is not to be upheld in turning the criminal loose upon payment of a fine that is ridiculous in its paltriness as compared with the wrong that is done.

Besides the general proposition that laws to be respected must be enforced with reasonable vigor and promptness, there is another important consideration which requires that the criminal branch of the courts comes to the defense of the public by more rigid punishments than have been inflicted, as a rule, of late. There is to a big extent a reign of terror in a few weeks, and that fact is attracting a great many adventurers and criminals to the State, not only Salt Lake City but other places. They come to ply a nefarious vocation. Let the proper rule prevail, and the public will be fleeced and imposed upon to a small degree. But let those whose object is burglary, theft, theft, or crimes against decency and morality, be given to understand, by officials who are elected and paid by the public for that purpose, that such characters will have meted out to them the full penalty of the law, and the condition will be very different. The emergency of the situation requires that judges, prosecutors and peace officers make a vigorous application of the criminal laws without delay.

SHADE TREES IN CITIES.

There was in this city for a time a strong disposition to abolish the shade trees that lined certain principal streets, and as a result many of those trees were removed. That disposition was chiefly on the part of business men who had not learned, either through lack of experience here or for some other reason, to appreciate the utility as well as the beauty of shade trees in a city like this during the hot summer months. As a result of what was allowed to go on for a short time in the way of cutting out the trees, there are several blocks where, in the summer time, the heat of the sun beating down on the pavements is almost unbearable, and in consequence those who attempt to extend the business limits along those blocks do not meet with much success, while residences in the districts denuded of trees have a decidedly harsher appearance that makes them far from attractive. As it is now, the contrast is noted between sidewalks where there are no trees, but where they could grow without interfering with traffic, and those where the shade growths are retained and cultivated, is decidedly in favor of the latter.

In recent years, the people of large cities in this country have come to put a high value on the planting of shade trees along the sides of streets, and in many places these rows of trees form some of the most beautiful summer features in great cities. In New York, for instance, which has been behind some places in this matter, there still has been some excellent work done, and now the Tree Planting association of that place is putting forth new efforts and plans, which are receiving decided encouragement. The present mode of operation is to persuade property holders on Fifth Avenue and other notable streets to plant trees in front of their houses, that the curb of the sidewalks may be lined with a growth that will at once beautify the streets and give comfort to the people. By this process it is aimed to make many of the side streets which lead up to Central Park, which are now rendered handsome by the costly and artistic houses which they contain, still more attractive by removing the air of dryness and formality now there, and which needs only avenues of trees to dispel. So hearty is the reception accorded the tree planters that they are confident that in a few years a great improvement will be wrought out.

In this city there are yet many residence districts where the absence of trees on the sidewalks is quite noticeable, or where the lack of uniformity in planting gives an uncouth appearance. While Salt Lake City was once pre-eminent for its comparative position in having good shade trees of reasonably uniform appearance, there are now a number of cities who can give this place pointers in this matter.

IT WOULD seem that the United States cannot refrain much longer from interfering in the Cuban matter, when things have reached such a pass that United States consuls are a browbeaten or overawed by the presence of violence or assassination that they dare not report the truth concerning events there. If, to keep on good terms with Spain, the American consuls must either maintain an abject silence or falsify their official reports, it would be a disgrace to this government to remain an accomplice in prolonging a condition of that kind.

THE CITY COUNCIL ought to hang the proposition to tax the public school six cents, or any other sum, for each child in attendance so high that it never can be brought forward again.

THAT CHINESE dragon, at a cost of $2,500, or one-tenth that sum, ought to be left out of the Jubilee. There are many better uses for the money.
