

Progress of Clyde S. Squires

How Young Salt Lake Artist Has Been Advancing Himself in New York Last Winter—Chosen Monitor of His Illustration Class—Will Spend Summer at Home.

THE progress of Clyde S. Squires in his New York art studies has been steady and uninterrupted during the past year. The season just closed is not the first that he has spent in the big metropolis in the advancement of his art knowledge, though it is without doubt the most promising he has thus far had.

It is now five or six years since Mr. Squires brought his first work to the office of the Deseret News at the solicitation of one of the editors. While it was not one of the marks of the novel, it nevertheless possessed elements that at once disclosed ability out of the ordinary along the lines of a newspaper illustration. It was accepted, and after that not a few of the young man's drawings found places in the columns of the "News." It was a notable fact that each picture was almost invariably made marked progress. His principal instructor has been Christy, the famous magazine illustrator. Mr. Christy has taken a strong personal interest in the work of Mr. Squires and has given him much substantial assistance. In fact the artist's recognition of the young man had much to do with securing him a permanent position on the Editorial Review, a New York fashion magazine, which now has a large number of Mr. Squires' pictures each month. At odd moments during the winter he also illustrated a large catalogue for Seigel Cooper & Company, the big New York dry goods company. Just before the close of school he was elected Monitor of his class, an honor that gives him the exclusive right to pose all of the class subjects, besides carrying with it a half-tuition privilege in the school.

Mr. Squires left for home on July 1, and after spending a few days in Chicago and visiting the world's fair at St. Louis, will come on to Salt Lake to spend the summer with his relatives here.

ONCE A WARRIOR BOLD, NOW A PARASITE.

MANCHURIA, though a part of China, is considered distinct from the empire proper in much the same way that Americans regard Alaska, though there is no similarity in their respective positions with regard to administration. Three or four centuries ago the southern part of what is now known as Manchuria was occupied by Koreans, and was a portion of their territory. It is not known how far north their rule extended, but there are traces of Korean architecture as far as Liao-Yang, which is 120 miles from the present Korean boundaries. At this early period the Manchurian element consisted of a few powerful tribes, who, though of the same general Mongolian stock, possessed many ethnological points sufficient to distinguish them from the great Chinese race which occupied China proper. The roving life in a wild country where young braves thought it no extraordinary achievement to kill with bow and arrow, singlehanded, the fierce northern tiger, developed the Manchus into a hardy, fearless warrior, with a love for courageous deeds.

The history of the Manchus is one of continued and rapid growth. From a small tribe their influence spread over the great plains of western Manchuria until they became a force which even great China deemed it advisable to conciliate. Their ambitions knew no limit, and early in the sixteenth century they began an invasion of China. A century later, by methods which at times gave evidence of the most crafty and skillful diplomacy, and again were those of a most cruel tyrant, the greatest empire that the world has known was acquired by a race of half-savage nomads.

As the home of the Manchu dynasty, Manchuria, in the eyes of the emperor, deserved honored treatment, and the followers of the standard—there was scarcely a Manchu who had not seen service—were specially cared for. It was declared by special decree that all Manchus for time unending should belong to one of the eight banner corps and receive a small monthly stipend. The great home country should remain the exclusive property of all Manchus, and Chinese were forbidden to hold land in it. The Koreans had now been driven to the south, and Manchuria extended virtually to the banks of the Yalu on the south and to the sea on the east.

The Manchu policy, which, in its conception, provided for the continuance and development of a great race of pure Manchus, who would always be at the beck and call of the Manchu dynasty, and would be a safeguard against the restoration of Chinese rule, brought on results quite the reverse of those desired. The Manchus found his small wage sufficient at first to provide food, and there was no longer the necessity to live the arduous life of a hunter or herdsman. In a generation or two the race had degenerated into a lazy band of parasites who, in the absence of a strenuous life, had lost all the cunning and the warlike skill which had brought to them a great empire. They maintained a reputation for fierceness, however, and at the time of the late war with Japan it was predicted that the Japanese would find a match in the Manchu cavalry. The first engagement between the two dispeled forever this illusion.—James W. Davidson in July Century.

MELBA IN A NEW OPERA.

SPECIAL Correspondence.
LONDON, June 25.—Music lovers here had their anticipations aroused by the reports from Monte Carlo as to the merits of Saint-Saens' new opera "Helene"—which was given in the Riviera for the first time last February—and its production at Covent Garden was waited for with uncommon interest. First night opinions pronounced the new work, which is in one act, worthy to rank with its author's best efforts, and it may be said without exaggeration that nothing more operatically dexterous or tunefully refined has been heard at the Royal Opera House in many years than this new piece by the author of "Samson et Delilah." The scoring, beautifully balanced, is an impressive feature of "Helene," and particularly satisfactory in the modern ear is the low-toned, sonorous bass which lends dignity to the effect of the music.

Seldom, at least in London, has an opera been staged more beautifully. The scene is, of course, Troy, and this has given the opportunity for a series of stage pictures which are a delight to remember. The whole thing is the story of the flight of Helen and Paris turned into a love-legend, and purposed to show the supreme royalty of love over all the other passions of men. Melba, who sang the title-role, already had done so at Monte Carlo, but since that time the composer has made many changes in his score, so that the prima donna had to rehearse her part entirely. However, she was in her best form and was recalled many times after the fall of the curtain, as was M. Dalmores, the Paris, and Miss Parkina, the Venus.

Wilson Barrett certainly has the knack of finding effective plots for his plays. "The Actor," never Land, the drama that this actor-manager recently wrote for his own use, contained a situation which was practically new, and the idea of "Lucy Durham," which Barrett produced at Liverpool, the other night is even more striking. It tells the story of a man's scheme for bringing down vengeance on the head of his own father. The parent is Lord Mount-fallon, a wealthy and pleasure-loving English peer, who has betrayed a woman of lowly birth, and Durham, the child of the two, is the illegitimate child of the drama, we see him, as a young man, and determined to revenge himself and his mother, and throughout the play the day of reckoning comes nearer and nearer. Fortune wherewith to carry it came to Monte Carlo, and he gets to be a great financier. His plan is to ruin Lord Mount-fallon, to get possession of his ancestral home, and to dramatically with Durham turned from his purpose by the mother, just as he is ready to strike the final and crushing blow. The play's reception at Liverpool was so enthusiastic that Barrett means to bring it to London as soon as possible, and I understand

A HAPPY QUOTE.

Senator Blackburn says that the most felicitous quotation apropos of any pending measure in the senate was uttered by the late Senator Vance of North Carolina.

A strong effort was being made in the senate to pass the Paddock pure-food bill. Conger of Iowa, at present minister to China, had succeeded in getting the bill bearing his name through the house, but the southern senators had defeated it in the senate. Frequently, however, an effort would be made to get the provisions of the Conger bill attached to the Paddock bill as amendments. At a time when Senator Paddock had the floor to present the merits of his bill he was interrupted by another senator, who intimated that inasmuch as the Conger bill had passed the house, it might be better to more carefully examine its provisions. At this juncture Senator Vance managed to secure recognition.

"Mr. President," exclaimed he as he slowly arose from his seat, "the Conger bill is dead."

"'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more!"

No more was heard from the Conger people—Edward Tarrisse, in June Lip-pincott's.

A CHILD TEACHES A BISHOP.

The newly-elected Methodist bishop, Dr. William Burt of Rome, is noted for his cheerful and placid manner. Nothing ever ruffles him. He is never heard to complain.

A clergyman complimented Dr. Burt one day on his good disposition.

"You never growl about anything," he said. "No matter what kind of a meal is set before you, you eat it cheerfully. If you are feeling poorly, you conceal it. How did you manage to acquire such a fine habit of good-humored tolerance and resignation?"

"Maybe the remark of a child that I once overheard helped me to learn to complain and grumble as little as possible," said Dr. Burt. "While I was studying at Wilbraham academy, I spent a few days with this child's father—a good man, but a chronic growler. We were all sitting in the parlor one night, when the question of food arose. The child, a little girl, told cleverly what each member of the household liked best. Finally it came to the father's turn to be described.

"And what do I like, Nancy?" he said, laughing.

"You," said the little girl slowly—"well, you like 'most anything we haven't got."

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic, any, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.
