FOUR JAMES WYMPER. (CONCLUDED.) "Forgive me," he said, taking her trembling hand...

"O, but how unfair—how—!" "Should me presently, but hear my story. I ran away from a man who had caused me to feel that I could not marry and invent things if I had a chance...

"I-I think," Bessy said, "I should like to see you again." "Just ten minutes," said Bessy. "They will think it so odd."

"But yes! The stupid fellow! It was evident that he had not yet patented a machine for cringing or cowering through life."

"Poor! he almost howled, 'why, there ain't a machine running on this old hemisphere, or in the United States, that he can't improve and beat. Poor! and he with the heart of a child and the brain of a man!'"

A SCOTCH PRAYER. "God bless this house and all within its walls. O God, bless the meal, and the hall yard, and the muckle town o' Dumbarton."

DISCONTENT.—Some people are never contented with their lot, let what will happen. Clouds and darkness are over their heads, although it rains or shines.
