No perceptible change had taken place in the score of years. Aside from the leathern-sallow tint which the flesh of the dead takes on the face had the naturalness of life itself. The cheeks were not sunken, there had been no falling away of the flesh, and the expression was as per- fect as when the blood of life coursed through the veins, long years before. For an hour the son, a man of 30 years, sat gazing upon and studying the face of the father who had died when he was a boy of 11 years.— Chicago Herald .	reggs are good?" It was only the other day that a gen- tieman friend of mine solved—appar- ently—the question by taking up an egg, wiping the large sud quite clean, and then he placed the tip of his tongue to the central part of this big end. He said that by so doing, the egg could be accurately tested, because, if it was good, it would be found that there was a tiny warm spot on the in- side of the egg which would be plainly percetible to the tongwe. I tried it, when, sure enough, the speck of heat responded an "Im all right."
