The Dried Fruits of America.

Up to within a short period the United States have been entirely dependent upon the South of Europe for the supply of the luxury of dried fruit, such as raisins, Zante currants, prunes, figs, etc. The total amount imported by the United States is not less, in round numbers, than $15,000,000. Several years ago California started on a large scale the cultivation of the grape and it was successful. Successing this came the cultivation of dried fruit to a raisin. Samples of the raisins were sent to Europe, and when shown to Mr. Clemens, the great raisin factor of Malaga, he remarked that in time the California raisins would supply the entire market to the exclusion of the foreign products. California is now coming to the front in the matter, and from recent experiments made by the Aliden Evaporator it has become evident that this country is soon to be made independent of foreign supplies of raisins, currants, prunes, etc. There is another article of dried fruit that bids fair to be important in the future of this country, and that is dried peaches. In Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Georgia there are immense peach orchards, covering hundreds of acres; by a new process the peach is now pared, sliced and dried in such a manner as to make it one of the most delicious desert dishes. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Illinois, trials made in dried raspberries and blackberries has been a success, and there are houses in Chicago that can fill on demand an order for 500 barrels. The system of drying fruit in this country by hot air, instead of the old process of drying in the sun or in the kiln, has proved of great value. The enhanced prices at which the foreign fruit dealers have held their products during the past four or five years have driven our importers to the necessity of reducing their orders and compelling the shipments to be made on consignment; and now that it is demonstrated that our Western slope can furnish all and more than is sufficient for home consumption, we may look for a speedy release from foreign dependence.—Ex.

An IMPORTANT LAW-SUIT DECIDED.—A suit was decided in Portland, Maine, about the 24th of August, by Judge Clifford of the United States Circuit Court, which had come before the Upper Court question, and a very close one too, and may therefore be interesting to persons who are in the habit of discussing the local option law in this State.

The case passed upon by Justice Clifford was briefly this: One Wells, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, sued the Maine Steamship Company for the sum of $1000 brought him from New York to be sent to him in Portsmouth, which were seized by the sheriff under the Maine or prohibitory law, and destroyed. A decision was rendered in the case by Judge Fox of the United States district court in favor of the company; this decision was affirmed by Judge Clifford of the United States Circuit Court, and the result is declared to be that the owner of the liquor has no recourse.—Sacramento Union, Sept. 3.
