

REMARKABLE SPECIMEN OF BLIND GIRL'S WORK

Beautifully Dressed Doll to be Displayed at Kenyon Reception—Will be raffled.

One of the features at the reception to be held in honor of the blind at the Kenyon hotel Friday next, will be the exhibition of a beautifully dressed doll, the adornment of which consists of the handwork of Miss Marie Hansen, of 240 East South Temple street. Miss Hansen has been blind since she was a little girl, but has progressed so well in educational matters that she now conducts classes of little blind girls, teaching them to read, and to do various kinds of work. Miss Hansen also teaches in the public library, where her services are much appreciated.

The doll's dress which she has made was planned by Miss Hansen. She selected the colors and made them to match the brown hair, light eyes and pink shoes of the doll. She crocheted a hat for the doll, the work on which was performed, Miss Hansen said, mostly at night, after the cars stopped running, "when I could see to do the work much better than when there was so much noise." Miss Hansen worked for two weeks in dressing the doll, tying the bows and doing the sewing herself.

The doll will be raffled and tickets have been taken for sale by Mme. Saxe's millinery store on East South Temple street, The Deseret News Book store, Kelt-O'Brien's, and at the Kenyon hotel next Friday. The doll will be placed on exhibition this afternoon at Mme. Saxe's millinery parlor, and at the Kenyon reception.

KOREAN LOSES HIS MONEY.

K. Kondo has learned that age can not wither nor custom stale the infinite variety of Etta Lewis. Kondo is a Korean, and has been taking American notes on his travels. Kondo met her on the street Monday evening, and when he parted company with her, he and his large "roll" had been separated. Kondo forthwith narrated a fearful tale to the police, who thereupon gathered the inimitable Etta under their wings. Etta swore that she had never seen Kondo before, but the Korean appeared to be so certain in his identification of Etta that she was detained.

INTERESTING LECTURE ON RIFLE'S EVOLUTION

Capt. Clayton Coolidge Talks About Muskets and Modern Firearms At the Armory.

Capt. Clayton Coolidge, inspector of rifle practice on the First infantry staff of the National Guard of Utah, gave a most interesting lecture Monday evening in the state armory on the military rifle and its evolution. The lecturer prefaced his remarks with reference to the bow and arrow which preceded fire arms, and was first known among the Greeks, Romans and Norsemen. Their accuracy and records were remarkable. The English were the first to put the bow into active use at target practice. While one man was loading his musket, another man could shoot six arrows in the same time. The Arabs were the first to introduce the gun, the Moors following and introducing the weapon into Europe. The various makes of guns, particularly the flint locks, were described, this weapon coming into prominence in 1650. This gun is still in use in Africa with an elongated leaden bullet.

In the early times of the musket such a thing as rifle practice was unknown. The first successful rifle was the Spencer used in the early stages of the Civil war, followed by the Winchester. Later, American rifles were used in Asiatic countries and in Europe. The Krag-Jorgenson, recently used in the U. S. army, was, in the opinion of many, the best rifle in use until the new model army Springfield was adopted. For some years it was difficult to find a bullet suitable for use with the Krag. Before long all rifles will be equipped with telescopic attachments for long range shooting, in the opinion of Capt. Coolidge. The modern military rifle is now more accurate at a range of 2,800 yards, nearly one and two-thirds miles, than the old muskets of Civil war days were at 100 yards, considered then an extreme rifle range, said Capt. Coolidge. In those days fire was reserved until the whites of the eyes could be seen and now sharpshooters aim through telescopes at distances of over a mile and hit their target.

Adj. Gen. Wedgwood made a few remarks, detailing the competition at Camp Perry in Ohio last summer. An invitation was extended by the general to all interested in rifle practice, to visit the armory target galleries during the winter for practice and in the spring to visit the rifle range, where they will be welcomed into the practice.

If you will stop the first symptoms of the cough with Ballard's Horehound Syrup there is no danger whatever of croup. Sold by Z. C. M. I. Drug Dept., 112 and 114 South Main Street, Salt Lake City.
