

ness. One could fancy that here it were impossible to grow old or that flowers should shed their petals even under the tip of autumn winds.

LEADS SIMPLE LIFE.
The fresh appearance of the outside of the villa prevails in the interior, which bears the mark of Caruso's untold absence. Everything seems intended to make the familiar presence of the owner who comes thither to lead a simple life, going to bed in his study and enjoying his dinner and his music and occasionally receiving a few intimate friends. The fine Marmontel does not grow old here, but is as if thankful for the introduction that breaks the monotony of his day. This is the owner's prime favorite, that he has raised from puppyhood.

BACK TO THE AGES.
The courtyard of the villa is the most interesting part of the house and though completely restored has not lost its former significance. One side has the characteristic stone window of the end of the fourteenth century; the other is decorated with grotesque after Puget. One notices, by the way, that Signor Caruso, though not a collector of antiques, possesses some rarities in that line; two Corinthian pillars stand before the main facade, and of old so-called African marble, precious because no one knows from what part of Egypt the Romans imported it, while near the door is an exquisite "bellini."

MANY FINE CURIOS.
The music room, not yet finished, will be one of the main attractions of the ground floor; while much care has been lavished on the frescoing of the chapel, which contains an altar piece in the style of Raphael representing Christ and the Magdalene.

One reaches the second floor by a broad hall the windows of which command a view of the courtyard while on the walls are weapons of all nations.

allies and periods, some of which have been used by Signor Caruso in costume parts on the stage, as the decorative writers are said to be troubled of his gun when hunting in the same preserves of the king of Italy.

LAID IN STONE.
The luxurious bedroom of the owner opens on a fine terrace overlooking a large corner of the house. Here the owner's hand of the artist has not been idle, the parapet of the terrace being so finely sculptured as to make one forget that such lace-like masonry is carved stone.

AMBITIOUS GARDENER.
The garden—what is the garden of the villa—pointed out on our way to the entrance of the grounds the various new plants he had laid out with a view of pleasing his master on his return home, which it is said, upon engagements will defer for three years. Fusing a laurel hedge he remarked, "Signor Caruso will find no finer laurels than these on his travels."

NOEL VANCE.
No home is so pleasant, regardless of the comforts that money will buy, as when the entire family is as joyful as a child. A bottle of O'Connell's Fruit Syrup costs 10 cents. It will cure every member of a family of constipation, sick headache or stomach trouble. For sale by F. J. Hill Drug Co., "The Never Fails."

meantime they send out emissaries in search of a new domicile, which is usually selected in some cavity, such as a hollow tree trunk, a hole in a wall, or chimney.

The swarms which settle thus often assume the most unexpected and grotesque shapes. The shape of a swarm forming a pendant to a branch of a tree is well known, but more eccentric alignments are not uncommon. There is an old custom, still followed by some people, of making a fearful noise by striking against old posts and pans or by firing off guns in order to induce the swarms to settle and thereby prevent them going far afield. But it was proved long ago that this noise did not trouble the bees in the least or make them settle where they did not want to go.

It has also been alleged that all this noise carried with it a sort of proprietorship in the swarm. This explanation may have some truth in it.

As regards the swarms, the only thing that can force them to settle is a jet of water from a syringe or pump or a spray of sand or fine dust. Some say that the bees can be brought to alight or can even be hived by means of mirrors collecting the rays of the sun, which are then concentrated on the bees, imparting to them a continuous motion. This may be efficacious, but no matter how much noise is made the bees are not troubled by it.—New York Sun.

KAISER AS NEWS-PAPER READER.

The Manchester News, Nachrichten, in an article on the Kaiser's newspaper reading, says he reads about newspapers extensively, and with sufficient regularity and sufficient breadth of choice to keep him thoroughly as to all shades of public opinion. Newspaper clippings, however, play the chief role in instructing the Kaiser on the affairs of the day. These are sent in folio regularly to the emperor by the foreign office and by the literary bureau of the ministry for home affairs. The various technical departments send in hundreds of clippings on their special subjects. Newspaper clippings are pasted on foolscap sheets, with name and date of paper. Embellished with imperial annotations and comments, the clippings are subsequently returned to the offices which have sent them, where they are carefully pigeon-holed.—London Evening Standard.

In most cases consumption results from a neglected or improperly treated cold. Foley's Honey and Tar cures the most obstinate coughs and prevents serious results. It costs you no more than the unknown preparations and you should insist upon having the genuine in the yellow package. For sale by J. J. Hill Drug Co., "The Never Substituted."

ROYALTY CHAMPIONS BEAUTIFUL AMERICAN.

In the divorce suit instituted in Paris by Mrs. Hart McKee, of Pittsburgh, the beautiful American girl is receiving the staunch support of the Infanta Eulalia, Princess of Spain and one of the haughtiest aristocrats in Europe. Mrs. McKee and her husband, whose matrimonial careers have become notorious, have long had the friendship of the proud Castilian princess, but when the break came in the marital relations of the McKees the Spanish woman instantly gave her allegiance to the woman in the case and came out in a statement in the Paris press to the effect that Mrs. McKee was fully justified in her course by the actions of her husband.

SOME QUEER BEE SWARMS

PERHAPS the strangest settling place ever chosen by swarming bees was a man's beard. Among several interesting photographs of bee swarms shown in the Strand, one of a bald-headed man with a beard of bees reaching to the middle of his breast is the most extraordinary.

The next in interest, at least to the bee man himself, shows that individual's beard covered with what looks like great black rough mittens. As these gloves were composed of hundreds of live bees they could at least be counted upon as warm.

Often when in dealing with the bees the beekeeper takes the queen into his hands the other bees, attracted by the queen odor, settle on the man's hands or arms, unless they find the queen herself.

This peculiarity was responsible for the predicament in which a clerical bookman found himself. His beard had settled on a single tree, but from the behavior of the bees it was clear the queen was not with them. After looking for her she was found some little distance away, with a few other bees around her.

On raising her from the ground the bees that had been with her clustered on the bookkeeper and were quickly joined by the swarm, which was now breaking up. The swarm consisted of between 25,000 and 35,000 bees.

They not only covered the outside of his coat, but crawled up under its long skirts, which they amply lined with their bodies. They also crawled into the bookkeeper's ears, from the knee to the waist, so that the worthy clergyman presented a most extraordinary appearance. The swarm, it may be added, was successfully driven away when bees were about to swarm they did their honey bees with a large quantity of smoke and then take their flight. Whether they are "honeyed" or not, they can tell swarms. These swarms fly into the sky, forming a great cloud, and then settle down to rest wherever their fancy takes them. For the swarms rarely decide to make a home at the spot where they first alight. This is but a halt in their journey, and in the
