

SCHOOLS AND EDUCATION.

Dr. N. W. MICHAEL.

A much is being said and done in his community relating to schools, teachers and education, permit me to offer a few words, suggesting a course, which would be very popular with us.

The impression I have is that education is not safe. In the most valuable acquisitions attachable, it is something that may be possessed without fear of losing it, or, even lost to regret, if systematically obtained and wisely stored.

The kind of education should be that best adapted to the individual, to the number of life intended, and so thorough as to develop all the powers of the mind, as well as the physical energies of the person. There are conflicting opinions upon questions that have been considered in connection with the educational interests of a community, and to some minds harmony seems only attained by the exclusion of what is really necessary in the development of men's moral and spiritual nature. This part of our nature can not safely be neglected, ought to be at some time and place properly and thoroughly developed, for the sake of safety, and the perpetuity of society. And the question naturally arises, when and where shall these principles be taught? Is it better to have them scattered and regulate the heart, in all its promptings, and create a conscience that will be an interesting guide in the judgment of right and wrong? or, is it better to have them concentrated in a locality, for every individual boy, and especially boy, a candidate for certain moral action, that shall exhibit its influence and exercise control over the educational aims and the entire life?

The history of education in other countries has disclosed the fact that it is not the number of schools that will insure the best results, but the quality of any people, but that it depends very much upon the character of the schools. We may say that knowledge is power, and that knowledge is the foundation of true institutions, but experience proves that knowledge which is merely mechanical and superficial, and mixed with mere affectation, is dangerous.

This fact compels me to say that regular education, to answer its purpose, must be not only thorough and practical, but also moral.

By practical I mean that which may be employed upon machinery, or the soil and mineral wealth of the earth; and by moral improvement, we mean the improvement of man's soul.

The education which bears the name of the human mind is being more and more improved, and is changing rapidly. This fact compels me to say that regular education, to answer its purpose, must be not only thorough and practical, but also moral.

But practical education is not the only kind which may be employed upon machinery, or the soil and mineral wealth of the earth; and by moral improvement, we mean the improvement of man's soul.

The education which bears the name of the human mind is being more and more improved, and is changing rapidly.

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians? The teachers of our youth, while entering upon their duties, are to be educated, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

This practical end of all education, I think, is best sufficiently kept in view in the conduct of our common schools. Our teachers are educated to let us in the direction of history and science, to determine their qualifications, but why should they not be educated as Christians? They are virtuous men and women, and are they otherwise than Christians?

LANDS IN TOOELE COUNTY.

1. Reservation Order Granted to the Tooele Park Land Company.

An order has been issued by the Tooele District court in favor of the Tooele Park Land company petitioning Messrs. D. Clinton and Leavenworth, holding the right to hold land from the state to parents, to the government, and to him who is the fountain of all knowledge, and would have the children like him in all that is virtuous and good.

STILL EQUALIZING.

The Board of Equalization was in session again last night. Mayor Scott presided. The following members were in attendance: Pickard, Endean, Heath, Hyde, Hardy, Young, Tuckerman, Parsons, Anderson and Lyon. Complaints from the Thirtieth ward were disposed of, and work on the petitions of Fourteenth ward property owners commenced.

RAILROAD.

E. Morris made his case, which was denied. A. C. Morris, John Morris, J. H. Morris, and J. Morris, Jr., were present.

INDUSTRIAL.

H. T. Taylor, on behalf of the Industrial Association, presented his case, which was denied.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

Times Note of the Petition of Frank W. Wicks, Esq., to the County Clerk.

He gave his notice to the understanding that he may be compelled to make it public, so as to do more to influence it. Let me see that his influence is in the right direction, such as to allow him to do what he wishes. He is the fountain of all knowledge, and would have the children like him in all that is virtuous and good.

He is the fountain of all knowledge, and would have the children like him in all that is virtuous and good.

THE CHORAL SOCIETY.

A Special Programme given by the Choral Society.

A meeting of the board of directors of the Choral Society was held, and the following interesting programmes prepared for the Tercentenary concert to be given in honor of the Tercentenary Congress, on Wednesday evening next:

INCOC!

A. SHRIEKING...SUCCESS!

WONDERLAND

LORE OF STOLE

WANTED

10¢. ADMISSION. 10¢.

SHORTHAND

PURE & SPLENDID FINE SILKS

WANTED

16¢. yds. the Best Jersey Silk for

14¢. yds. Fine Jersey Silk for

15¢. yds. Faile Francaise for

12¢. yds. Brocade Stripe Silk for

10¢. yds. Brocade Stripe.

WANTED

11¢. yds. Brocade Striped.

10¢. yds. Brocade Striped.