(By E. Irving.)

Southern Arizona has long been noted for the abundance of its evidences of the pre-Columbian civilization of the Toltecs. The mountain tops are strewn with their mounds, and their pyramids and their temples are scattered over the entire range of the Colorado mountains, and on the broad valleys and mesas below the rugged summits of the latter.

One of the most interesting of these is the "Cave of the Toltecs," near Phoenix, a cavernous hole in the side of a mountain, the entrance to which is a narrow crevice, and the interior is a vast chamber, the floor of which is a smooth, polished surface, and the walls are covered with the remains of ancient masonry.

For many years the Toltecs have been the subject of much speculation, and it is now generally believed that they were a people of great intelligence, and that they were the founders of the great cities of the Southwest.
