Searching for and Finding the Body.

LOGAN, July 21, 1877.

Editor Deseret News:

Dear Brother:—After an unsuccessful search of ten days, the body of Orson G. Beach was found in the Logan river, in a good state of preservation, about two and a half miles below where it is supposed he undertook to cross the river in search of his horses. Immediately after the body was found, the County Coroner and jurors summoned to hold an inquest on the same, repaired to the spot in the cañon, and there deliberated upon the cause of the death of the body there lying dead, resulting in the verdict that Orson G. Beach came to his death by drowning while attempting to cross the Logan river. In this connection it may be proper to say that no marks or bruises were found upon the body, only one or two slight ones on his face, occasioned by coming in contact with rocks in the stream.

The river in Logan cañon, especially at this season of the year, runs very rapidly, and being interspersed with rocks of all shapes and sizes, renders it very difficult to ford, it requiring a strong person to do so, in order to stem the current of the water, and Mr. Beach being a man in his seventieth year and no swimmer, was unable to accomplish the task, resulting in his death.

Mr. Beach was a native of New York State. He came to Utah at an early date, and has lived in Logan for seventeen years past. He was a hardworking, industrious man, as is evident from his constant laboring in the cañon to obtain a livelihood. His remains were interred in Logan Cemetery, Saturday morning, July 21.

Much credit is due to many of our citizens, on account of their unceasing endeavors to find the body. Between 150 and 200 persons were engaged at once in searching; and the distance between the place where he attempted to cross and the place where he was found was repeatedly examined, without finding him, until Friday, July 20, at about 3 p.m., in consequence of the body having a tendency to sink underneath the surface, so much so that when the body was released from one's grasp it would immediately sink, which fact accounts for the difficulty of finding him.

Rock-laying upon the Temple here has commenced, and an excellent spirit prevails with respect to the work on that building.

Yours respectfully,
JAMES A. LEISHMAN.

Celebration at Ogden City.

OGDEN, July 25, 1877.

Editor Deseret News:

The Thirtieth Anniversary of the entrance of the Pioneers into this valley was celebrated in a peaceable and quiet manner, in this city, yesterday. The weather was beautiful and pleasant. A delightful rain fell in the night of the 23rd, which, with the accompanying thunder and lightning, purified the elements and cooled the atmosphere very materially.

The memorable day was not ushered in by the loud booming of cannon, or the rattle of musketry, but at an early hour in the morning the bell from the tower of the Court House rang out a merry peal, the Stars and Stripes—our national flag, was run up and was soon floating gracefully in the morning mountain breeze. Subsequently the Ogden Fire Brigade, in full uniform, were out practising with their splendid little engine, of which they feel so justly proud. At half past nine o'clock a.m. the members of the Sabbath Schools, under the direction of their superintendents and teachers, of the Second Ward in this city, also from West Weber, Hooperville, Riverdale, Easton, and South Weber, assembled on Union Square, where they were formed for a procession, under the direction of Prof. Mouch, Marshal of the day. Here they were joined by the Ogden Brass Band, and the North Ogden Martial Band, and marched to the Tabernacle, where a grand jubilee concert was given by the above-named schools, the Tabernacle choir, and a select choir composed of the leading singers of Weber County. The vast assembly was called to order by the marshal of the day. The Tabernacle choir then sang the anthem, "The Lord is great." The chaplain, Hon. C. W. Penrose, offered prayer. The select choir sang a glee, "The Days of Youth and the days of Pleasure." Among the numerous selections which followed, were, "The Shells of the Ocean," "The Morning's Ruddy Beams," "We Meet Again," "The Old Sexton," "Pure Cold Water," "Oh Come to the Jubilee," "List to the Convent Bells," "On the Mountain Life is Free," "Gather Round the Standard Bearer," "A Sunday School Call," "The Pilgrim's Song," "I know a Bank," "Our Own Sunday School Volunteers," &c., all of which were rendered very effectively, and elicited appreciative demonstration from the audience.

The brass and martial bands discoursed delightful music at intervals during the concert, and a short but very interesting speech was delivered by Hon. F. D. Richards, in which he spoke of the object of the Latter-day Saints in leaving their homes in the United States and in Europe and emigrating to this country, which at that time was a desolate wilderness. He contrasted the circumstances of the people who first entered this valley and the circumstances of those he was addressing. He congratulated them on the improvements they had made during the past few years, and the many blessings they enjoyed in their comfortable homes, surrounded with beautiful gardens and orchards, while their granaries and larders are well filled with the products of their fruitful farms.

The concert, which will be long remembered by those who participated in its enjoyments, concluded about one o'clock p.m. was conducted by Professor Wm. Pugh, who was ably supported by Professors Ellis, Fowler and Montgomery. The balance of the day the people enjoyed themselves in various kinds of recreations. The Fire Brigade gave a ball at Jones' Grove, which was well attended and well conducted. Another ball was given in the First Ward Assembly Rooms, also in the First Ward schoolhouse which were very tastefully and handsomely decorated for the occasion. Everything throughout the day was remarkably orderly and quiet, and up to this time I have heard of no accident or anything else which occurred to mar any portion of the day's enjoyments.

Scientific Advertising.

The Colusa Sun, has a very sensible article upon the subject of advertising, which will be of value to those who expend money to make known to the public their business. We copy the following:

Several gentlemen who have made advertising the study of years have said to us that an advertisement in a live paper—one in which the matter is carefully written or selected for the particular class of people among whom it circulates—is worth four times as much, even according to the number of copies printed, as in a paper that one reads at a glance; or one that the readers get in the habit of thinking as a matter of course, they will find nothing in it of interest to them. Advertisers have found that papers circulated gratuitously are worthless as advertising mediums, for the reason that the pains is not taken with the reading matter as those papers whose circulation depends on the quality of the matter presented to its patrons.

Then it is the constant advertising that tells. If every week the eye must fall on the name of the business or the article advertised, the reader does not have a chance to forget it. Helmbold's Buchu, Hostetter's Bitters, and a hundred other articles, have become famous because no one could escape the names. Take two merchants, and let one advertise and the other find times too hard to afford it, and see which will have the hardest time.

Blessed is the man who never says his mother's pies were better than his wife's are.
