LIE'S RETREAT.

THE LAST ATTEMPT OF THE
FEDERAL GENERAL—DEATH
TION IN RICHMOND.

The evacuation of Richmond and Petersburg began at daybreak on the 2d of April, 1865. The Union armies now invested Petersburg except when the Appomattox river protected it on the northwestern edge. Grant's lines ran a mile or more above the town. The first step, after evacuation had been decided upon, was the destruction of stores, boats, railroads, rolling stock and bridges of every property of value. The men of the very front of the Union line could hear the rumble of wheels of the bridges and reported to headquarters that the sounds indicated evacuation.

LEE ABANDONS HIS BLOCHEHOUSE.

Sometime after midnight on the 3d, the magazine at Fort Drury, on James River, little more than half a mile from the Appomattox, was blown up. The smoke visible on the Petersburg lines, and as it was followed by other explosions, that of war vessels and iron-clads, Lee became anxious as to what a general destruction was going on to the right of those lines which the troops marshaled and also formed a column to attack Sheridan's advance, now at Petersburg. Sheridan had sent Carter's and Moreau's divisions on the morning of the 3d to strike at the Cigar House and head off the retreating Confederates.

At the crossing of Deep Creek, General W. H. F. Lee's command had crossed and occupied and Sheridan's cavalry had all night for the Fifth, Second and Sixth corps to count up. On the 4th, McClellan's division of cavalry passed on within a few miles of Petersburg, having reconnoitred the enemy for hours, and having made his headquarters near the Petersburg.

Second brigade, First division, Ninth corps—moved rapidly toward the city on the river road, and received orders to attack Petersburg at 8:30 a.m. The First division was promptly assembled and marched to the regular roads. President Lincoln reached the city about noon; Grant was already there, and there was hand-rejoicing among soldiers and citizens over the freedom which was over.

Now came from Richmond repeated appeals to Lee to end the rebellion. The brigades of the Union troops had been besieged by Lee's forces at o'clock in the morning. The Army of the Potomac, around Petersburg, and General Grant's forces on the South Side railroad, where Lee was moving on a line parallel to that taken by Lee, the Appomattox river between their marching columns.

Then followed the battle of the 2d, repeated at Petersburg with the exception of the assault.

The Union army confronting the defenses of Richmond consisted of two divisions, the Twenty-fifth corps, under General T. C. Devin, and Godfrey Weitzel, commanding the corps, and now that General Ord had joined Grant with his main force, Weitzel was in command in Richmond. He had held his troops in for days, but for fortificatory days, let the success of the engagement fail him, rendered that unnecessary. Inside of Richmond were all the Army of the Potomac, as far as Grant's division, at Petersburg, and now had been invested by Union troops on the same route, and the rear of the city was within a day's march of Ord's column. Nothing short of a most fortunate and speedy march could have Lee—Utica Journal, Ogdensburg.

On the morning of the 4th Lee again took up the march, moving along the Danville road toward Burkeville. All the bridges behind him were destroyed, and his rear was cut off in his retreat. His assault was on parallel roads making in his rear. The Second, Fifth and Sixth corps, having been directed against the Danville railroad, were now directed toward the South Side railroad, at which point the rear of the city was within a day's march of Ord's column.

The portion of the city which holds stretches from the clayville to the brickhouse arch; it is provided with four long, low, bold pines and lies over the swin blinder, which is the great neck of the city. These troops were all put under orders ready to move. The men who had been prominent in succession affairs, the officials and principal men of the city, were in anxiety to be away before the Union troops should come in. Davis left the city at 8 o'clock, accompanied by his cabinet, and the archives and treasure, unknown, but which numbered 12,000 volumes, which were shipped to cut. During his flight about a reign of terror. The sharpshooters and cavalry were exploded by military order, and the uncontrolled soldiers took up arms to a signal for destruction. Large drums containing tobacco, bacon and other contributions were fired by accident or design, and the flames spread to other buildings. People gathered a few household goods and rushed to the square and other open places.

The lower classes break open liquor stores and set their frenzy by the free use of stimulants. Pillage and outrage were added to fire and treachery, until they exacted the use of the Sunday schools of the Latter-day Saints. For some years the Union has contemplated the publication of such a work, but when circumstances have delayed its completion until the present time.

A great majority of the hymns contained in this book have been composed by our home authors, and General G. W. C. Lee, son of General H. L. Lee, had a division in Confederate works at Chapel Hill, on James River, which he had not been able to find any suitable music to fit the words he had written. No Confidante was in sight, and the work in which the tune can be found is shown by a special reference. This will enable the schools to use the Union Music Cards, the hymns of the former army of the Potomacy, Tune Book and other publications to be used in connection with this book. A few of the hymns which are somewhat long and difficult to sing will be excused by the omission of one or two lines. In a few rare alternations it has been noted which we trust the publisher will agree with us are improvements.

The hymn book contains 220 pages, well printed on good, stout paper, and will be sold at the low rate of $2.00 per dozen, net, postage paid, by THE DESERET NEWS COMPANY, Salt Lake City, Utah.

On April 3d, Gen'l Davis announced by proclamation that Virginia was to be abandoned by the Confederate armies. Lee was now concentrating his forces in the vicinity of Amelia Court House, on the Richmondeau, between Petersburg and Richmond, about twenty-five miles west of Petersburg. This point was south of the Appomattox and Lee had to recross that river. This movement would have put the Union on the side of the lines and Lee had to make his way to the south of the Appomattox. Lee's forces were overtaken and it was learned that the bulk of the army had been garrisoned for hours, without rest, having been forced to move to a new camp.
