THE IOSEPA COLONY.

Crops Raised by Hawaiians There This Year.

Grandchild's on Hand.—Excellent Results Achieved Through Careful Management.

Iosepa—the colony of Hawaiians established in Skull Valley, Tooele county—comes in with a splendid showing this year. This is all the more satisfactory when the difficulties which the colonists have had to contend with are considered. They occupied an unirrigating country, and by reason of former inexperience were not well prepared for the great work before them; for in their native land fruits, vegetables, etc., are raised almost without effort. But they have persevered, under an efficient management, and success is crowning their efforts.

Elder H. H. Cluff, who has charge of the colony and its operations, says the health of the people is good. They are feeling well over their situation, being perfectly contented. Last spring, new members of the colony accepted the government invitation to return to the Sandwich Islands. Several of these have written back, expressing the wish that they were here, and desiring their induction to return to the colony as soon as practicable.

The crops raised this year include 9,000 bushels of wheat, 1,000 of oats, 2,500 of barley, 400 of corn and 500 of potatoes, besides 600 tons of hay, 125 tons of squashes and pumpkins, and a large amount of garden produce.

This season the colony has finished a granary to hold 14,000 bushels, and in it it has been housing the year's crop.

The Hawaiians at Iosepa have on hand sufficient tree stuff to last them between two and three years. In this respect they are much better off than many people who have had opportunities superior to those afforded them.

The colony will also market this year 150 head of swine.

Speaking of raising pumpkins, Elder Cluff says that two years ago he received from the agricultural department at Washington, through courtesy of Hon. John T. Caine, a package of Tours Mammoth Pumpkin seed. The first year he raised from it on 11 square rods of ground 3,300 pounds of pumpkins, which are an excellent food for stock. This year a larger area was planted, with an equally tremendous yield.

BROWNIES IN FAIRYLAND.

The Charming Little Opera to Be Produced by Home Talent.

The ladies of St. Mark's guild have secured the copyright of the Brownies in Fairyland opera and will have it produced in this city. Thirteen years ago the now celebrated Palmer Cox commenced his charming verses of the Brownies. Their mogic pranks and mischievous tricks delighted the hearts of boy and girl readers of the St. Nicholas magazine, while later, in condensed form, these verses have found a place in every child's library in the land.

The possibility of dramatic representation was first suggested to Palmer Cox by Mr. Malcolm Douglas, the clever child poet. His verses for children under the title of Odd Little Folks, illustrated by Brion, who helped to make the fame of Little Lord Fauntleroy, are well known to readers of St. Nicholas. He is also a dramatic critic and musical genius of high order who was found in this opera. The Brownies in Fairyland, was the first definitive opportunity. Two years ago he formed a partnership with Palmer Cox and the weaving of the opera began. Both gentlemen were devoted lovers of children, which fact aided largely in producing the realistic effect sought. The manuscript and musical score completed (they have been rewritten three times) Douglas picked out the charming and often unique gems of the opera as we old heads. These two gentlemen have been rewarded for all by the unprecedented success of this entertainment in the larger eastern cities, as Boston, at the Park theater, Philadelphia, and at the Fourteenth Street theater, New York, where the play is now in progress managed by Palmer Cox himself. The entire western press is unanimous in praising this new opera, so well adapted to home talent rendition. The play is to be copyrighted and can only be procured for local presentation at high figures, but owing to the fact that the entertainment is so much above the average affair of this nature and of such interest to both old and young, little risk is incurred.

GUEST BROOKLYN GIRLS.

SET IN THEIR RIGHTS' LATE IN A BOOLEY CAR AND NEARLY CAUSE A RIOT.

The question whether or not it is good form for young women to sit on the laps of young men in a crowded street car was excitedly discussed to a Brooklyn trolley car Sunday evening, says a reporter from New York. It was decided in the negative. Shortly after 11 o'clock a close-town car whizzed along on its way from Hunter's Point to the city hall. A crowd of well-dressed, highly respectable people, all in the last stages of drowsiness, filled all but four seats.

At Park and North Portland avenues the car stopped and a party of young people boarded it. There were just eight of them, four girls and four young men. They were laughing and chattering, evidently in high spirits. When the girls started for the empty seats they were stopped by one of the young men, who said:

"Look here, girls, if you sit down we'll have to stand up. Say, what's the matter with your sitting on our laps?"

The girls hesitated a minute, then one of them, a pretty blond, said:

"If you'll do it, Jennie, I will."

Jennie was not going to be dared, so, without more ado, she plumped herself down in one of the waiting laps, and the other girls with much laughing and talking followed her example.

If the other people in the car had been sleepy before the merry party had appeared, they were wide awake now. One old woman with little gray curls over her temples, who had been dozing safely in one corner, woke up with a start and gasped: "Land sakes! what next?" A stern looking man who sat opposite drew herself up stiff as a poker and tried to freeze the lapsitters with a cross glare, while two youths in another part of the car bounded and giggled alternately. But the girls didn't poke the girls of the young men in whose laps they sat.

Finally Father Wagner, of St. Bernard's church, who was at the end, jumped from his seat and said sternly to one of the girls:

"Hereafter young women, take this seat and leave that shocking position."

The girl, looking a little alarmed at the priest's stern tone, took the empty seat. Then three other men got up rather sheepishly and offered their seats to the other girls. Two of them accepted, but Jennie, who had been the first to sit in her escort's lap, sat there with a taunting look in her eyes, as if she board or saw nothing of what was going on.

If there had been a tempest in a teapot before, there was a howling gale now. The stern looking woman with a stony face motioned to the conductor to stop the car, and indignantly called out at least four blocks from her stopping place. A man who had been having lots of fun out of the proceedings was taken in hand by his wife and marched out to the front platform, while the old woman with gray curls was nearly weeping with indignation.

Father Wagner was the only one to force that girl to get off her young man's lap. Turning to the conductor he said:

"Conductor, I insist that you put those young people off the car. Their actions are positively shocking."

The conductor made a weak attempt to persuade Jennie to conform with the rules of good form, but Jennie only looked at him slowly, while her young man grinned and the rest of the party cheered. Then Conductor Bay began to get angry.

"See here, if you won't get off that young man's lap I'll put you off the car."

Jennie was getting mad now, and she made up her mind to resist strongly.

"I won't do it," she snapped back.

A pause seemed to be getting serious. Bay was mad. Father Wagner was insulted, while Jennie was decidedly and more. Finally when the car got to Atlantic avenue and Clinton street, Bay decided to accommodate matters, so he stopped the car, called in Policeman Hearion, and the two gently pushed Jennie, carried her out of the car and put her on the sidewalk. The young man didn't try to stop them, neither did the others. They all followed meekly, and the car left them standing on the corner. Jennie evidently bitterly regretting the lesson she had learned, and having sacked her up in the fight.

It is said the company intends putting up notices in the cars requesting its "lady" patrons not to sit on men's laps.

Young and the Utah Central Railway company, and having caused an execution to be issued upon said judgment on March 30 following, for the levy and sale of 218 tons of rails, which it is claimed should have been safely held by the said marshal and his deputies sufficient to satisfy said judgment. It is set forth, however, that Farnsworth failed to do this, but out of the proceeds of the sale, loaned, satisfied a judgment obtained after the issuance and levy of plaintiff's attachment.

TAMMANY,

Hall and the Tammanyites Defeated in Their own Strongholds.

Grover Has Used to His Utmost Boast Wilson and Breckenridge are Come to Grief.

(and serve the same.)

In the presidential election of two years ago and this one just passed, would think the men who are chosen to represent the people in their political affairs, that the people are longing for, as they were misled, and will stand no more promises.

In times of general prosperity, people become very lax in keeping themselves posted on what their public representatives are doing; but when it happens that for them to make both financial ends meet a pretty thorough investigation is sure to follow, and the infinitely smaller are pretty generally weeded out, and the honest statesmen sent to their after vocation is assisted and general prosperity again returned.

We have seen of late years that a retrograde in the congress with precedence not unprecedented here legislation, will in fact withdraw some confidence in the manufacturing, commercial and financial circles, and as a general result, is temporarily very active in periods. To be out.

Always at commercials, all advance in price. Wages will advance, work will be more extended and the advanced prices will not be so much felt.

We have reason to believe that a change in the congress will prevail since our understanding
