

LUXURIOUS EVENING CLOAK.

This satin cloak of an exquisite pale yellow has deep killings of chiffon of the same shade placed over killings of yellow taffeta. The embroidery which is carried up the back of the large Medici collar, is in black chenille shaded with fine jet. The lining is white satin. Yellow is the newest evening shade both in wraps and gowns.

French government the second international congress of women's works and institutions will begin June 15 and continue five days. There are to be two honorary presidents. One is Mme. Isabella Bogelot, who has done so much reformative work among discharged women prisoners as to receive the decoration of the Legion d'Honneur. The second is Mme. Jules Simon, who heads the Union for the Protection of Infant Life.

In a circular just sent out these French women emphasize the necessity for co-operation of men and women. It is interesting to quote this much: "It is a grave error to seek, as many do, to separate the interest of women from that of men, or to place them in opposition, when these interests, though distinct, are closely united. For this reason our committee appeals to men as well as to women and invites all to contribute from their special knowledge and experience to the discussion of the questions on the program."

There has been a suggestion that the meetings of the General Federation of Women's Clubs be held triennially instead of biennially. The suggestion will probably come up at the Milwaukee biennial for settlement. Inasmuch as State meetings are held annually it is argued that national meetings are not necessary often than once in three years. To many clubs it means a big expense to send a delegate half way across the country. Besides, the planning of an attractive program is no small task. Indeed, it is so onerous that several members of the present program committee have a rather grown-up joke that the remains of the committee are to be allowed to lie in state at the coming Milwaukee meeting. In this connection it is worth mentioning that the National Council of Women meets triennially, with an executive session held annually.

The Post's Round Table met on Monday at the residence of Mrs. Rachel Miller, Mrs. Hal Brown acting as chairman for the day. The poet chosen for the occasion was J. G. FEMININE FLOPSAM.

A New and Freshly Faded Mrs. Clarence Mackay is Advertising.

Mrs. Clarence Mackay is the first to introduce in America the Parisian fad of fringed rings. The rings are new in design. They border on the barbaric style of jewelry in point of setting and the combination of precious stones. The ring is a heavy circlet of dull gold carved in quaint designs. A high dark setting of clear cameo, with an exquisitely carved figure, forms the center for a double row of diamonds. The inner row of stones has the appearance of being sunk in the cameo. The outer circlet is framed in an invisible setting of gold. From the bottom of the setting falls a flexible loop of gold. From this loop falls a tassel of pearls, emeralds, topazes, sapphires and diamonds. This tassel or fringe has a lattice of the stones as a connecting link between it and the setting; the jewels are tiny and are finely set in a flexible setting. The fringe falls below the knuckles half way down the hand. When the hand hangs down the fringe falls over the fingers, entirely concealing them from view.

America's Women Ministers.

There are today about 300 women ministers in the United States. In America the ministry is being more used by women as a profession than the law. The great value of women ministers in America is for scattered parts that cannot possibly afford to support a man. They can maintain a woman minister. The chief opposition to women pastors comes from ministers of the poorer and least qualified class. Of course the older and more conservative number five reside in Berlin. It is even more interesting to know that in the Orient there is an occasional woman doctor. One of them is a Chinese, Dr. Hu King Eng—who is first physician to the household of Li Hing Chang.

FASHIONABLE INSOLENCE.

People Put Up With It Because They Do Not Know How to Resist It.

There is nothing inherently wrong in being fashionable; there is nothing necessarily vulgar in living and acting in the world there frequently gets to be a kind of concession of manner which is not short of insolence. And the question is that those who are less fashionable put up with it because they do not know how to resist it in kind. To present it any other way would be taking too much notice of it and therefore the unrebuked until it becomes a social nature. It can hardly be said that there are evidences of the grand manner in high society; they are only cultivated defenses from or offenses toward supposed inferiors who have the better of it to get behind the wind and keep nobility. Our feelings are very close to the skin, and the closer they are the help nothing, even though we cannot sign. The only satisfaction we make to have when we suffer from such insolence is the knowledge that we can so insult the humble as to make some time to be so treated by some one. Maurier had this in mind when he made the cartoon which showed an ambitious fashionable in a home of a husband. "And what did you do?" "Oh, I insulted little Mrs. Jones—The Criticism."

AN EXQUISITE BLACK HAT.

Our lady readers will appreciate the artistic qualities of the above half-tone illustration due to the improved stereotyped half-tone process controlled exclusively in this city by this newspaper.

This new model, of moire and mousseline de sole, is one of the most becoming shown this season. The round stiff crown, which nevertheless follows to a certain extent the Tam o' Shanter lines, has the top of gathered mousseline. The upper part of the novel brim which is cut in to the crown on the left side, is also of the gathered chiffon. The sides of the crown and the under brim are of black moire plainly stretched over the frame. A large wired bow of black moire clasped with a handsome rhinestone ornament fills up this short side. Four ostrich tips are set back of the bow.

The week has been a busy one in a social way, Thanksgiving day especially being distinguished by a large number of dinner parties, balls, receptions, etc. The dancing academies were thronged with holiday dancers, the Theater and Opera House were brimmed with society people at both matinee and night performances, and at private residences the spirit of hospitality and cheer were displayed in quiet home and guest gatherings—the latter especially breaking in upon the usual order of family functions, which have been chiefly the rule on that day. Other pleasant functions have enlivened the week, making it a most delightful one.

Maxwell, and the latter a popular resident of North Salt Lake.

On Wednesday night the Seventeenth ward hall was the scene of one of the most unique social affairs of the season. The event was in the nature of an old-fashioned ball, not in the way of continuing specially, but in entertainment, admission tickets, decoration and refreshments, which were reminders of the old pioneer days when the simple products of hand and soil furnished the chief articles of consumption and exchange. The admission price was fifteen cents or two for twenty-five, and the affair held a select flavor from the fact that only garden produce was accepted for admission—the guests having to show at the door a good sized pumpkin. Potatoes were given in charge when the pumpkin was too large for the size of a man's partner, and in the reverse case, the escort had to rustle up extra change in the way of potatoes as an equivalent. In the dancing hall corn husks and straw figured conspicuously as decorations, and candles and jack o' lanterns were the illuminating agents of the night. Old fashioned dances were the order of the evening, and the refreshments, served in the lower hall, consisted of such dainties as corn bread and bacon and beans, with pumpkin pie as desert. About four hundred people were present and the affair was an immense success.
