KAINTUCK.

We are in receipt of a letter from the postmaster of the town known by the name of Rexburg, but the postoffice name of which has been changed to "Kaintuck." The lady who handles the mails at that place says, in a peremptory manner, "you will in future address this office as Kaintuck." And further, alluding, we suppose, to the proper name of the town, "it will no longer be recognized."

We think the postal authorities were in very small business when they changed the name in this way. "Kaintuck," we presume, refers to a person whose chief notoriety has arisen from his anti-"Mormon" exertions and his lack of scruple in reaching his aims.

Of course the postmaster is not responsible for the change, but she might have announced her wishes in a more "gentlemanly" manner. And as for the declaration that the name of Rexburg "will no longer be recognized," we think she will find herself mistaken, so far at least as the public are concerned. Rexburg it is and Rexburg it will remain. But for Postoffice purposes we "will" in future address it as "Kaintuck," and we hope the "postmaster" will feel content and learn to be less peremptory.

People writing to Rexburg, Bingham County, Idaho, should please be careful not to flurry the lady postmaster further by addressing letters in any other way than "Kaintuck."

A FRANK OPINION.

The Chicago Post considers the establishment of the new Methodist University at Ogden, Utah, "a notable event in religion and education." It refers with delight to the financial and moral support given to the movement, and encourages it with cheering words. But it has something to say, in conclusion, which rather dampens the warmth of its eulogium. Its opinion of the loud-mouthed anti-"Mormon" who is to be placed in charge is not very complimentary, though it is no doubt as just as it is outspoken. Here it is:

"The Evening Post cannot, however, suppress its regrets that our Methodist brothers have called to the head of this noble college of theirs a little and inconsequential chap like Rev. Sam Small, late of Georgia. Sam has cut some lively capers in his day, but he never displayed any of the qualities that enter into a great college president."

IMMORALITY INCREASING IN THE CITY.

AN old and respected citizen called at the DESERET NEWS office August 23rd, and in the course of conversation mentioned the following facts:

He is the owner of residence property in close proximity to the Temple Block, and a day or two since was waited upon by an individual who expressed his desire to rent it. He unhesitatingly admitted that the intention was to use the premises as a house of assignation, and stated his willingness to pay $125 per month rental, on a five years' lease, or for even a longer period. "There is no fear," added the applicant, "of the neighbors kicking, inasmuch as the two houses immediately below it are already secured for similar purposes."

It is scarcely necessary to say that the offer was at once indignantly declined.

This is not the first case of this kind that has been called to our attention during the past few weeks. In each case it was reported to us that the parties applying claimed that there was an understanding arrived at with certain city authorities. Of course this should be received cum grano salis. It is not to be believed that "Liberal" officials would be so wicked as to agree to wink at the establishment of such evil places within the city limits.

But it is certain that the license foreboded by the People if the "Liberal" element should gain the control of city affairs, is becoming a publicly patent fact. The history of Ogden is being repeated in Salt Lake. Gambling halls and houses of vile resort are multiplying, and the spasmodic, surface efforts to enforce the city ordinances in relation to them are the thinnest kind of a burlesque on the suppression of vice. ●

Property owners who knowingly lease or rent houses where crimes are to be practiced, become morally implicated in the sins committed there. And further, they are violators of the law, and if it can be shown that they were aware of the purposes for which their property was engaged, they can be severely punished on conviction.

Under the city ordinances any person who keeps a house resorted to for purposes of lewdness; or who wilfully resides there; or who is the owner thereof, or has control of it as agent, guardian or lessee, and fails to suppress the evil by removing the occupants; or who lets any building knowing that it is to be used for such purposes, is liable to a fine of one hundred dollars and imprisonment for three months.

In Ogden the U. S. Marshal had to take this matter in hand, and by vigilant and efficient deputies lay hold of the evil with a strong hand. It had some brief effect, but it is now claimed that the social vices complained of flourish again almost unchecked. It is to be hoped that there will be no need for the exercise of Federal authority in this city in the same direction, but that a determined effort will be made, persistently, with an honest intent to suppress the evil, so far as that is possible considering the disposition among a portion of the population to sustain it and keep it alive.

The most likely way to abate this evil is for neighbors who are aggrieved by the proximity of houses of this character to unite in making complaint. Not by grumbling and expressing in a private way their grievances, but by taking legal steps for the suppression of the evil and the punishment of those who are responsible for its maintenance.

Any person who, through "the love of money," which is said to be "the root of all evil," will aid in the spread of vice by renting property, knowing or being well assured that it is to be used for immoral purposes, is unworthy to be classed with decent people, and should be banished from respectable society and punished as provided by law.
