

The Word Silhouette.

THE making of silhouettes can hardly be classed among the low arts, since there is so little art about them. The best of these represent the human profile in a crude way, and they were regarded as rather a cheap kind of pictures even in the days when they were most popular. Indeed, the very word silhouette means something poor and cheap and it had its origin in a spirit of ridicule. It is taken from Etienne de Silhouette, who was a French cabinet minister in the year 1759, when the treasury of France was very low because of costly wars with Britain and Prussia and by the extravagance of the government. When Etienne de Silhouette became minister of finance he set about making great reforms in the public expenditures. He was, by nature, a very "close" man, and he went to such extremes in keeping down the public expense that he brought great ridicule upon himself, and finally anything that was cheap and poor was referred to as a la Silhouette. A very crude picture was popular at that time. It was made by tracing the shadow or profile of a face projected by the light of a candle on a sheet of white paper and the outline defined with a pencil. This was such a very poor and cheap sort of a picture that it was at once called a silhouette in further derision of the very saving French minister, and the name has "stuck." It is an instance of the curious derivation of some words in common use.

and this unkind slur on a man who was really trying to introduce needed reforms in the spending of the public money has long been accepted as a good and proper word. Indeed, there is no other word used for pictures of this kind, although there were such pictures long before Monsieur Etienne de Silhouette had his name attached to them in so embarrassing a way—Morris Wade in St. Nicholas.

THE ENGINES.

When we read in song, or story, of the heroes crowned with glory, who have fought in famous battles of the past, we are prone to sit down sighing, for the lot is cast. From the world of men with whom our lot is cast. And we sorrow for our nation, cursed with soft degeneration.

As it follows down the path the Roman road, When no mighty purpose thrills it, when but just for riches fills it, It has lost the great creative spark of God. 'Twas but yesterday one doubted men had courage still, and floated At insouciance, "that vague, unmeaning word." Then there came a sound like thunder, and the doubter saw his blunder. 'Twas the passing of the engines that we heard! For they broke upon our quiet with a mad and reckless riot, And they shattered all the silence into sound. How the engines hissed and spattered, how the flying horses clattered, As their iron hoofs sped by us with a bound! And the men with knightly bearing, on to smoke and battle facing, Seemed like heroes of an age of war and strife.

For they boldly courted danger, aiding foe and friend and stranger, With the courage that outweighs the love of life. Facing flame and felling ember, not a man paused to remember, Home, and wife, and little children, left behind. Rushing in through smoke and cinder, not one selfish fear could hinder, Or drive duty from the throne of his mind. There was someone yonder calling, and though mighty beams were falling, And the smoke was like a raging devil's breath, Still without one moment's waiting, or a second's hesitating, On they leaped and wrenched a human life from death! "Nay, true courage has not vanished, nor has time all heroes banished," Spoke the doubter, with concession at the last. 'Tis the daily scene of Duty lies unselfishness and beauty.

And he stood with head uncovered as they passed. —Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE COP ON THE CORNER.

As he stands on the corner, his six feet of height. The passing throng easily o'ertopping, Broad-shouldered, erect, a real knight of the club. With a gesture, cats, wagons, men stopping. Now stern, as befits the strong arm of the law. Now bending, some light jest to bandy. The small boys exclaim with a reverent awe, "The cop on the corner—be's dandy." The teamsters who drive in the long line of trade. And make it their constant endeavor To shut off the path and dispute right of way. And the rules of order to sever. Who try to escape from his vigilant eye.

But find their fessie cannot make him. Once fail to observe them, say under their breath. "The cop on the corner—plague take him!" The timid young girl and the feeble old man. Afraid of the street, with its bustle and roar. And its perils of horse and of human. Find in his protection a tower of strength. Past which there's no danger can pass. And thankfully sigh as they go on their way. "The cop on the corner—God bless him!" —Baltimore American.
