After walking a few steps further the stranger threw Clark upon his back in the ditch, placed his knee upon the latter's chest, and, holding a pistol close to his face, demanded to know if he had any money. Clark informed the robber that he had no meney, but that he had a piece of tobacco, a pipe, but that he had a piece of tobacco, a pipe, but that he had a pocket knife, which articles the fellow appropriated, assisting Clark to take them out of his pockets. The robber was about to strike Clark over the head with the butt end of his pistol, but the latter said, "You would not strike me in such a cowardly way as that, would you?" The fellow then let him get up and the two wafked along several blocks together conversing. The colloquy was about as follows:

Clark-You are used to this kind of business, are you not?

The distance from the point of starting to that of stopping was about ten miles. The road is completed to a point about six miles beyond where the party reached, but time did not admit of their proceeding farther. The road is an excellent one, and apeaks highly for the energy, skill and perseverance of Major Wilkes, who is its manager and part proprietor, and also of the Sultana Smelting Works at the end of the Road. We understand that the company have in contemplation the early completion of a tunnel from American Fork to Little Cotton wood Kanyon, by which rail communication will be effected with Alta, and which will greatly increase the business of the road. At the present time, we are informed, that it is paying its running expenses outside of the trame of its proprietors.

We shall not attempt to describe the seenery in American Fork Kanyon. One of the ladies designated it as "painfully grand," But it is of the most amguilicent character of kanyon somery, and will undoubtedly be often resorted to by admirers of the romantic and picturesque. The ascent of the kanyon by rail up a steep grade all the way, but at some places as steep as 287 feet to the mile, was an exceedingly interesting feature of the 5 dity by the regular seven o'clock train, all delighted with the excursions, and expressing themselves concerning it as being one of the most enjoyable trips they had ever made.
