

ARTS AND INDUSTRIES AT PROVO.

The Provo School of Arts and Industries is progressing, as is shown by the exhibition, placed in the High school building. Woodwork, domestic art, domestic science, dressmaking, millinery, normal manual training, painting, design drafting, drawing and the art and manual training, correlation work of the training school are represented. More departments will display their products at the next exhibition. The constructive and art-needs work is especially fine, showing the design and pattern in connection with the finished article. The art work in cross stitching is worthy of special mention.

The domestic science display of breads and preserved fruits shows the value of industrial education for young women. The dressmaking and millinery classes have products where skill and taste are seen. Young women are gaining in this department knowledge in workmanship that will be of much use to them, should they desire to apply that knowledge for a livelihood, but knowledge and training when adapted to home needs is spent in a more legitimate way.

The aim of the school for young women is to promote home industry and to establish and perpetuate therein durable, beautiful workmanship through manual dexterity and good sense. The costume should be made in a tasteful way to fit the human form and emphasize its beauty—not the human form made to fit the costume or to fit a can see method in the problems that are exhibited.

The first class in manual training has displayed four pieces of work, explaining the development of each of their problems in whittling. The first, a drawing of the motif of form, and decoration; second, the design, or mental picture; third, the working drawing, and fourth, the constructed piece of workmanship. The work done in the school generally is through this line of development. The third class in manual training are working on their courses of study in art and manual training correlation. Some interesting illustrated courses are in the exhibition.

The painting classes have displayed their good efforts in charcoal tones, study and water color landscape painting. The design students have their rosettes and borders and designs for dollies, woodcarving and pyrography.

Many students of the application classes are gaining a great deal from the principles taught in design A. The drafting students have also their place in the display. Drafting and mechanical drawing must always be considered in mechanism. The drawing classes have their work displayed in Selling's tea.

The students here are dealing with the object, learning about form, color, light and shade, rendering, etc. Decorative arrangement is pleasing in so many of the subjective work is given to add interest and to show where knowledge of truth in nature can be applied for ornamentation. The products from the children of the training school are just as good as the rest, considering the little hands and undeveloped minds of the workers. This exhibit represents the work as it is continually being done in the school and is not a made-for-show display. The students are to be congratulated on their expression in materials and are gaining strength through a manual means that will add to success in life work.

A little sunset picture, by Calvin Fletcher, is a source of admiration in Mr. Eastmond's studio. The university is proud of its artists, ladies as well as gentlemen.

WAS A FIGHTING IRISHMAN.

Gen. Syrus Bussey, former assistant secretary of the interior, was a cavalry officer during the civil war, and served under the command of Gen. Phil Sheridan. He says that early in the war, when Sheridan was captain and a quartermaster, he came along a road where an eight-mile team was stuck in the mud with a provision wagon. The driver was unreasonably and mercilessly beating the helpless beast. Sheridan was in fatigue uniform, and when he called to the driver he received no reply, only an ugly look. Finally he shouted to him a command to stop beating those mules. Then he received a reply to the effect that he could shut his mouth or take what the mules were getting. Without stating his rank, without uttering a word, Sheridan slid from his black horse, grabbed the ruffian by the throat, threw him on his back, twisted the blacksnake's wrist from his grip and gave him a sound thrashing until he howled for mercy, and yelled "enough" until he could be heard for a mile. Then Sheridan allowed him to get up, handed him the whip, and said: "I am Capt. Sheridan, quartermaster of this army, and if you don't get this wagon out pretty quick, I'll thrash you again." Then the wagoner called two other men to his assistance, took hold of the wheels, and in two or three minutes the wagon was out of the rut, so that the army suffered no further delay.

SCALES HE BOUGHT BY.

The story told a visit to a Harlem couple the other day, and the happy young father rushed out of the house to borrow a pair of scales. There were no portable scales in the neighborhood. "Any bones, any rags, any bottles?" sang a voice in the street. "Here you!" called the fond father. "Come here, I want you to weigh something for me."

The junkman followed the proud parent to four flights of stairs to the top floor front. Baby was tied up in a towel and hooked onto the scales. The indicator showed exactly seven pounds. "Seven pounds!" cried the trained nurse. "Seven pounds!" echoed the father. "Don't let dot worry you," remarked the junkman. "Dose was der scales I buy by. I guess the child weighs ten pounds, maybe a lot after der!"—New York.

AN ELABORATE SILK SALE!

Which Ever Way They Look, Attractive Merchandise Tempts Them at Keith-O'Brien's.

We have much for which to be thankful. No longer is the air rife with rumors; no longer does doubt exist as to the future of this institution; no longer are high prices associated with this store; no longer do the people hesitate.

For a long time the tide flowed out—and out. Many a belief was expressed that it would never return. But when it finally came in there rode on the crest of each succeeding wave the people's confidence in this store—in its future—in its reliability.

Today the store is strongly forging ahead. The people are with us.

This institution is facing another Christmas season. Until that day of days there remains but 29 shopping days, each one bringing us closer to the inevitable rush—leaving only about 20 days for leisurely selection.

Already thought is turned to Christmas. Already this store feels the influence of that coming trade, certain to be tremendous in its proportions.

Last year we led the Christmas trade. Every energy will be bent to accomplish the same end this season.

Magnificent preparation has been made for the holidays.

The stock is greater—selections will be easier—stronger bargains are to be offered—more attractive articles will tempt you.

Keep these points in mind and help us start the ball rolling.

And we go on creating sales—every sale carrying with it bargains of some kind—because every sale represents lowered prices.

The McCall patterns are the best.
